September 14, 1900.

The reading public is always so exceedingly interested in the private lives and personal attributes of its favourite authors that a work just issued on 'J. M. Barrie and his Books,' by Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son, should meet with more than ordinary attention. The writer is Mr. J. A. Hammerton, who seems to possess in a marked degree that gift of chatty narration which is so essential in a work of this description. The volume is not a formal biography of the author of 'The Auld Lichts,' nor yet a comprehensive critical survey of his works. The aim has simply been, as the writer tells us, to produce a volume which admirers of Mr. Barrie's books may read with interest, and perhaps with some degree of profit, while those who are only imperfectly, or not at all, acquainted with his literary works may find therein 'an introduction to a delightful field of study.' The author makes some apology for indulging, by publication of his work, in what has been condemned as a reprehensible practice, since it implies the elevation of its subject to the rank of a classic; but he points out that the mere fact of the general public taking keen interest in living authors like Thomas Hardy, Rudyard Kipling, 'Ian Maclaren,' J. M. Barrie, and others, who are in thorough touch with the present generation of readers, would in itself be sufficient answer to the charge. After all, it is very well to speak of the judgment of Posterity, but 'he were a foolish man who wrote with the ghost of Posterity ever at his elbow'; and surely it is better to appeal to the heart of living man, who has his sympathies quickened by actual community of thought.

Of the earlier university associations of Barrie, Mr. Hammerton has several very amusing impressions to relate, mainly as seen through the eyes of his subject. The Edinburgh professors in themselves prove an interesting phalanx. Probably the one who had most influence on Barrie's career was Masson, that name held in great respect by all former scholars of the English language in the Scottish University. Never, as Mr. Hammerton says, was a Professor of Literature more imbued with the duties of his office and enthusiasm for the subject which he taught. His teaching made a lasting impression on Barrie. Then there was Blackie, whose breezy buoyant nature captivated all with whom he came in contact, though they might be conscious of his many weaknesses. Here is a comical story well illustrating his kindness of heart that Barrie tells of him: 'When the Professor noticed any physical peculiarity about a student, such as a lisp, or a glass eye, or one leg longer than the other, or a broken nose, he was at once struck by it, and asked him to breakfast. They were very lively breakfasts, the eggs being served in tureens; but sometimes it was a collection of the maimed and crooked, and one person at the table—not the host himself—used to tremble lest, making mirrors of each other, the guests should see why they were invited.' Other professors with whom Barrie was brought into intimate relationship were Calderwood, Tait, Campbell, Fraser, Chrystal, and Sellar, but they never quite influenced him to the same extent as the other two; and indeed it may be said that in none of their subjects did he particularly shine. However, in the matter of metaphysics Barrie had one notable triumph. He convinced that most unimpressionable of all human beings, a medical student, that he had no existence, strictly so called. 'He got quite frightened, and I can still see his white face as he sat staring at me in the gloaming. This shows what metaphysics can do.'

The volume is replete with good stories and interesting recollections, not all of them new, but sufficiently fresh to justify the labour of resuscitation. Perhaps the most attractive chapters are those dealing with Barrie's earlier struggles as an author and his literary characteristics. In regard to the latter it may be said that the personal element obtrudes very largely. Almost all Barrie's leading characters are in some form or other reduplications of himself. In them he furnishes an illuminative impression of his own individuality. The attributes which have chiefly contributed to his success in the literary profession are, according to Mr. Hammerton, his quaint humour, his unstrained pathos, his gift for character portrayal, and, above all, his lack of self-consciousness. 'He is not a great master of the novel in the sense that his admired Stevenson was. Some discriminating critics regard "Sentimental Tommy" as his masterpiece, others are equally certain that distinction belongs to "The Little Minister." For my own part, I can agree with neither, as it seems to me Barrie's limitation affects him precisely in that talent which prevents him producing a great novel: his constructive ability, so essential to a long sustained narrative, is by no means conspicuous. For the same reason he is not likely to produce a great play.' With this critical judgment we thoroughly agree.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. Walter Crane's new volume, entitled 'Line and Form,' will be published almost immediately by Messrs. G. Bell & Sons. It will be uniform with the 'Bases of Design,' by the same author, and will be profusely illustrated with drawings by Mr. Crane and other artists.

The scene of Mr. Bloundelle Burton's new romance, 'Servants of Sin,' which is to be published by Messrs. Methuen & Co. on the 25th inst., is laid in the time of the regency of the Duc d'Orléans, and it represents the results of the heartlessness of the French aristocracy of that period.

Mr. W. Carew Hazlitt's 'History of the Venetian Republic,' which was published forty years ago and has long been out of print, is about to be re-issued by Messrs. A. & C. Black. The work has been thoroughly revised and brought down to the present date, so that it may be said to constitute almost a new volume.

Mr. Gilbert Parker's volume of stories relating to Pontiac, so connected as to give a vivid picture of life in our French dominions, will appear on October 4 under the title of 'The Lane that had no Turning.' The volume, which we understand is the result of eight years' labour, will be published by Mr. William Heinemann.

Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. have in the press a volume of essays, military and political, by Mr. Spencer Wilkinson, entitled 'War and Policy.' The contents have mostly been contributed in recent years to reviews and magazines, and they are arranged in five groups, treating respectively of subjects bearing upon military history, the art of war, problems of British policy, national defence, and the South African War. The volume will be published simultaneously in New York by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co.

The long promised life of Coventry Patmore will be published this month by Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons. Mr. Basil Champneys, the author, has had the assistance of Mrs. Patmore in his work, and has been enabled to include letters to and from Tennyson, Carlyle, Ruskin, Mr. Aubrey de Vere, and many other eminent contemporaries. Personal reminiscences of Patmore are also contributed by Dr. Garnett, Mr. Sidney Colvin, and others. The two volumes will contain numerous portraits and other illustrations.

The biography of the well-known Baptist preacher and lecturer, William Landels, D.D., by his son, the Rev. Thomas D. Landels, M.A., which Messrs. Cassell & Co. are to publish this autumn, should afford interesting information regarding a singularly busy and varied career. An introduction to the volume from the pen of Dr. John Clifford bears testimony to the esteem in which the memory of his predecessor in the presidential chair of the Baptist Union is held, and contributions from the Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, and Mr. A. H. Baynes, Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, speak of his work for his brethren and his generation.

Messrs. Blackwood are about to publish a new work on China from the pen of Mr. Alexander Michie. The writer has been resident in the Celestial Kingdom for a number of years, and is therefore enabled to treat his subject from an exceptional standpoint. He has also had the advantage of studying the papers left by the late Sir Rutherford Alcock, who for several years represented this country at Peking. These papers are said to foretell in a strangely accurate fashion the recent trend of public events in China. Mr. Michie's work, which practically constitutes an account of an Englishman's experiences in China during the Queen's reign, will be in two volumes.

'The Speaker's Chair,' upon which Mr. Edward Lummis has been engaged for some time, will be published at an early date by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. The book sketches in brief the whole life of the Speakership, its origin, its antiquities, its varied fortunes and obligations, and the careers of the more celebrated occupants of the chair. To this has been added a statistical Appendix which gives in tabulated form a large amount of information relating to the subject, such as a list of the Speakers, with the date of their accession to office, subsequent rank or [illegible].

The new edition of the 'Book of Sun-Dials,' which has been announced for some time past, is now almost ready, and will be published by Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons immediately. Originally compiled by Mrs. Alfred Gatty, the present edition has been remodelled and greatly enlarged by Mrs. Eden and Miss Eleanor Lloyd. A chapter on 'Portable Dials,' by Mr. Lewis Evans, F.S.A., has been added, and the chapter on 'Dial Construction,' by Mr. Wigham Richardson, has been rewritten. Upwards of eighty new illustrations have been added.

Messrs. Chapman & Hall have issued a prospectus of their new 'Authentic Edition' of the works of Charles Dickens. In this they lay great stress on the fact that they alone possess the entire series of original steel plates and woodcuts approved by the author as satisfactory embodiments of his characters. It is interesting to learn on the authority of Mr. Chapman that the original of the immortal Mr. Pickwick was a friend of his living at Richmond. 'Seymour's Sketch,' he writes, 'was of a long thin man. The present immortal one he made from my description of a friend of mine at Richmond.' Dickens, it is known, paid a large amount of attention to the illustrations in his works, and was always anxious to convey to the artists an accurate idea of his own conceptions. The publication of the 'Authentic Edition' will commence early in October, and will be completed in twenty-one volumes, with the original illustrations by Seymour, Hablot K. Browne, Cruikshank, Landseer, Maclise, Marcus Stone, S. L. Fildes, &c., and a coloured frontispiece to each volume. The only misgiving we have is in regard to this coloured frontispiece. Why will publishers be so imitative?

Mr. Brimley Johnson will publish immediately a little paper volume entitled 'Songs of the War,' containing topical verses by Mr. A. St. John Adcock, which have appeared in the Spectator, the Critic, the New York World, and other journals. He will also have ready for the Christmas season a nonsense picture-book by an entirely new artist-writer, entitled 'Greybeards at Play: Ballads and Sketches,' by Gilbert Chesterton. The illustrations are in black and white, and a special cover in nursery colours has been designed by the author.

Among the autumn announcements of Messrs. Archibald & Co. are two volumes of 'Letters of T. E. Brown,' the author of 'Betsy Lee' and 'Fo'c'sle Yarns.' The work has been edited by Sidney T. Irwin, who also contributes an introductory memoir. The art of letter writing has in recent years lost something of its distinctiveness, but it is claimed for these specimens that they possess exceptional originality and charm. The same publishers are to issue a history of the struggle between France and England for supremacy in North America that began 1754, and ended with the capture of Montreal and the surrender of Canada to Lord Amherst in 1760. The title of the book is 'The Fight with France for North America,' the author being Mr. A. G. Bradley, the biographer of General Wolfe. It will contain a number of maps.

Some writers seem determined to saddle General Baden Powell with a description of the siege of Mafeking. The latest canard is that he has been invited by a leading publisher to write a history of the South African war, in which, of course, the Mafeking incident would occupy a prominent position. But how, we wonder, could the gallant officer write a reliable account of the campaign when he was shut up so much of the time? However, this is a mere trifle. He has been offered the most liberal terms, and is now supposed to be considering the matter.

Mr. R. Kearton's new book, 'Our Bird Friends,' announced by Messrs. Cassell & Co., is a popular and entertaining account of the most curious characteristics and interesting habits of our wild birds at home amid their natural surroundings. It deals with the wonders of feathers and flight; remarkable nests of different styles of architecture; eggs, and the value attached to their shape, size, colour, and numbers; the care and protection of the young; feeding habits; and remarkable songs and call-notes. Though primarily intended for young people, it will probably also be found of much interest by their elders. A feature of the work is the large number of illustrations, photographed direct from nature by Mr. Cherry Kearton, the author's brother.

We notice that the Daily News, in its issue of Monday last, takes exception to some of our remarks on the crude sensationalism that distinguishes so many of the novels of the present day. Our contemporary is disposed to look with a lenient eye on the matter. Unscrupulous adventurers, terrible murderers, fascinating but treacherous women, do not exist so far as the experience of most readers is concerned, but the account of their doings is undoubtedly interesting. 'Style' is all very well, but the essential quality required in a work of fiction is the gift of dramatic narration. Given this, minor shortcomings, such as defects in grammar, stereotyped phrases, ignorance of life, fade into insignificance. What we require is to be amused, and we should be thankful if by any means this end is attained.

We are afraid our contemporary has somewhat misunderstood us. We have no objection to murderers, adventurers, criminals generally, in fiction, though happily we have no nearer acquaintance with these gentlemen. Their adventures supply exciting reading, and we should be, and are, grateful for having our attention thus drawn from the commonplace routine of life without being too critical as to the methods used for our diversion. All this we admit. But there is a limit to easy going tolerance. We expect that their exploits shall be recounted with some degree of constructive ability. Even in sensational fiction there must be a substratum of probability. Writers cannot take the mind captive by merely wild situations. But what does the Daily News mean by the essential qualities of narration?

We fancy that here lies the point of difference between us. Can a writer be said to have the inborn talent of the true fictionist who neglects all the claims of rationality? We think not.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will shortly issue a handy and exhaustive 'Vade Mecum' concerning recent events in China, written on the lines of 'How to Read the South African War News,' which was so successful in the early part of the year. The book will furnish a brief but complete account of the events which have led up to the present state of things, the principal personages, Chinese, Japanese, and European, and the places daily mentioned in the Press, with a glossary of military and technical terms, local titles, phrases, &c.

The life of the famous actress, Helen Faucit, by her husband, Sir Theodore Martin, which is promised by Messrs. Blackwood & Sons this autumn, should be replete with interest. Lady Martin occupied a unique position on the stage, and in her private life enjoyed the friendship of many eminent people, theatrical and otherwise. The volume is principally made up of her correspondence, with extracts from the diary that she kept during her active career.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish shortly a new novel entitled 'The Silver Dove,' by A. C. Inchbold, author of 'Princess Feather.' The story is one of London middle-class life, and deals with the consequences of a man's momentary forgetfulness.

In the new edition of 'The Paston Letters, 1422–1509 A.D.,' to be published by Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., the separate prefaces and introductions to the three volumes by the editor, Mr. James Gairdner, will be superseded by a general preface and a general introduction in a volume by itself. This prefatory volume will also contain a supplement, in which the Roydon Hall Letters, noticed at the end of Volume III., will be printed from the original MSS. now in the British Museum, with a few other originals hitherto unedited. For the sake of the purchasers of former editions, this introductory and supplementary volume will be procurable by itself.

Lady Dilke's volume on 'French Architects and Sculptors of the Eighteenth Century' will be ready almost immediately. This volume carries on the work begun in the author's 'French Painters of the Eighteenth Century,' published last year. It will be illustrated with twenty photogravure plates and numerous other reproductions. The publishers are Messrs. Geo. Bell & Son.

Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son announce a number of new novels for immediate publication. These are: 'A Woman's Soul,' by Mrs. Heron-Maxwell and Miss Florence Eastwick; 'Mab,' a Liverpool story of the Stage and the Wesleyan Church, by Harry Lindsay; 'The Minder,' a Lancashire story, by John Ackworth; 'The Vicar's Atonement,' by Mr. J. Harwood Panting; 'For Lack of Love,' a story for girls, by Miss Lillias Campbell Davidson; and a story of mediæval adventure entitled 'The Grip of the Wolf,' by Morice Gerard. Later in the autumn these will be followed by 'The Heart of Babylon,' by Deas Cromarty, and 'The Shadow of Gilsland,' by Morice Gerard.

Messrs. Nisbet & Co. seem to be devoting more attention to fiction than formerly, and several authors appear on their list whom we do not remember to have noticed in this connection before. Among the new novels they announce are: 'The Flower of the Flock,' by W. E. Norris; 'The Journal of a Jealous Woman,' by Percy White; 'Wages,' by Mrs. L. T. Meade; and 'Non Sequitur,' by Miss M. E. Coleridge.

Messrs. Methuen & Co. will publish in a few days 'The People of China,' by Mr. J. W. Robertson-Scott. The books contains an account of the country, history, life, ideas, and foreign relations of the Chinese. Its object is to supply in a compact and interesting form information which the ordinary reader is likely to want. It will contain a map, a directory of men of the time in China, a glossary, and a bibliography.

Dr. C. G. Williamson, whose monographs on Richard Cosway and John Russell, R.A., have long been out of print, will publish immediately, through Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons, a volume on 'Pinwell and his Works.' The book will be illustrated with about fifty reproductions of Pinwell's work in pencil, wood block, and water-colour.

Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. will publish during the autumn a volume of sermons by Archdeacon Wilson, with the title 'Things New and Old.' They are a selection from his sermons preached in a Lancashire factory town. The work is an attempt to show that the old truths of revelation and of orthodox theology gain in force and freshness when presented in the light of the new truths which are being reached by scientific and historical methods.

Many readers are of opinion that Mr. A. T. Quiller-Couch ('Q') is at his best in the narration of short stories rather than in a long sustained narrative. They will be glad, therefore, to learn that Messrs. Cassell & Co. have a volume of short tales in hand by this author. It is entitled 'Old Fires and Profitable Ghosts,' and the contents deal with the spiritual world, or the spiritual side of things, and each story contains its own moral.

The New Minerva Library of Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. will shortly be enriched by the addition of Darwin's 'Coral Reefs.' There will be a portrait of the author from the picture by Collier in the National Gallery, and a critical introduction by Professor Judd.

Messrs. F. V. White & Co. are publishing a new novel by 'Lucas Cleeve,' entitled 'The World's Blackmail.' Amongst other works of fiction announced by this firm are stories by Bertram Mitford, R. H. Savage, and George Griffith.

Messrs. Skeffington will shortly publish a new sensational novel by Richard Marsh, entitled 'The Chase of the Ruby'; also 'The Order of Isis,' a story of Mystery and Adventure in Egypt, by James Bagnall Stubbs.

A new and revised edition of Mrs. Brightwen's well-known works on Natural History—'Glimpses into Plant Life,' 'Wild Nature won by Kindness,' 'More about Wild Nature,' and 'Inmates of my House and Garden'—will shortly be issued by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. He has also in hand for early publication, Alien's new novel, 'The Devil's Half-Acre.' The opening scenes of the story are laid in a wild region of New Zealand during the time of the gold craze.

In our note of last week referring to the forthcoming work on 'Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Death,' by Mr. Frederick W. H. Myers, the last word of the title was inadvertently printed 'Health,' thus destroying the sense. Our attention has been drawn to the matter by the publishers of the book, Messrs. Longmans & Co., and we have now pleasure in rectifying the mistake.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

M. Marcel Prévost has completed his study of the New Woman, called 'Vierges fortes,' by the publication of the second and concluding volume, 'Léa.' The first volume, 'Frédérique,' ended with the triumph of inflexible feminism over the rights of life and love. 'Léa,' on the other hand, shows us in an exciting story the revenge of life and love over the asceticism of the strong-minded virgins. Both volumes are published by Alphonse Lemerre.

A volume of naval memoirs covering many years of seafaring life is published by Plon, Nourrit & Co., entitled 'Mémoires du Baron de Bonnefoux, capitaine de vaisseau 1792–1855,' edited with a preface and notes by Professor E. Jobbé-Duval. Baron de Bonnefoux gives accurate information as to the state of French sea-power under Napoleon I.

The fifth volume of M. Émile Ollivier's important contribution to the history of the Second Empire, entitled 'L'Empire Libéral,' has just been published by Garnier Frères under the specific and significant title, 'L'Inauguration de l'Empire Libéral. Le Roi Guillaume.'

A new romance, entitled 'The Story of Adam Almens' (De geschiedenis van Adam Almens), by Jan Holland (Dr. J. F. Vitringa), will be published this month by the firm I. Wedding of Harderwijk.

We have received from Libreria E. Loescher & Co., Rome, the first number of 'Conventus alter de Archæologia Christiana,' containing much of interest relative to the Second International Congress of Archæology to be held in Rome from April 17 to 25 of the present year, and of which Signore A. Bevignani is the secretary. MM. Loescher & Co. also send us their Catalogue, No. 51, of secondhand books on archæology, comprising 2,137 numbers, many relating to Pompeii, Herculaneum, and Rome. Herr W. H. Küll, Berlin, has sent us his catalogue 'Internationale Marine Bibliographie' No. 4, containing numerous nautical works in various languages.

'La Jeunesse du Maréchal de Luxembourg, 1628–1668,' by M. Pierre de Ségur, comprises the early career of General Montmorency-Bouteville, who later became Maréchal Duc de Luxembourg. He was the life-long friend in good and evil fortune of 'le grand Condé'; and Voltaire said of him: 'He was the pupil of Condé in the art of war; and he obliged Louis XIV. to employ him by force of merit, for the king did not like him.' The firm of Calmann Lévy publish this interesting volume, which is full of anecdotes and striking pictures of the troubled period from the Civil War of La Fronde to the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle.

JOURNALISTS IN CONFERENCE.

The Annual Conference of the Institute of Journalists was opened on Monday last in the Council Chamber of the Guildhall. Here the members were cordially welcomed by the Lord Mayor, who in the course of his speech said that it was well understood that the Press wielded an unbounded influence, and it was universally admitted that its mighty power was directed towards the support of law and order, loyalty, patriotism, and philanthropy. Sir James Henderson, President of the Institute, expressed his sense of the honour conferred upon the Institute in being the first outside body allowed to assemble in that historic hall.

Some further preliminary business was then transacted, and the meeting was afterwards adjourned. In the afternoon the conference assembled in the hall of Lincoln's Inn, where Mr. Justice Lawrance, on behalf of the Benchers, gave the members a cordial welcome. Sir James Henderson, in moving a vote of thanks for the use of the hall, said that members of the Institute well remembered the sympathetic words with which the late Lord Russell welcomed them in that hall. The motion was carried, as was also a resolution, moved by Sir J. Henderson, recording the deep sense of the Institute of the irreparable loss it in common with so many bodies had incurred through Lord Russell's death.

The President then delivered his address, the subject being 'The Evolution of the Newspaper: a Century of Progress.' After alluding to many papers, both extinct and in existence, he said that so far as he could ascertain there were now published in the United Kingdom seventy-seven newspapers which were in existence at the beginning of this century. Of these England had sixty-four, nine in London and fifty-five in the provinces. Ireland had eight, Scotland had four, and the Channel Islands had one. The latter part of the century had seen the birth of the new journalism, about which much had been said, laudatory and condemnatory. Doubtless it had its good points and its bad points. It seemed to be leading to the cheapening of papers, though after all that was not a very new feature, for at the beginning of the century there was a journal published at a farthing, and styled the Farthing Post; but it was also responsible for many other tendencies which he was old-fashioned enough to dislike and to dread. The sensationalism that used to be regarded as the sole possession of their American 'confrères' was becoming too common in the British Press, which consequently was, in his opinion, in danger of losing much of its dignity and prestige. The fostering of a love for the sensational must be hurtful both to the public and to the Press, and must tend to the weakening of their influence among the more intelligent sections of the community. The desire to publish exciting news, served up with startling headings, led too frequently to the exaggeration of facts, and to the hurried publication of statements which, if calmly reflected upon in the editorial sanctum, would never be allowed to see the light of day, at all events in such a form. The personal element was another striking characteristic of 'up-to-date' newspapers, in connection with which abuses were liable to exist. The inevitable interview was apt to bring into too great prominence people who might, with advantage to themselves and others, be allowed to remain in the shadow of a kindly obscurity. The lady journalist, though scarcely a product of the new journalism, had undoubtedly been helped forward by it to the fighting line of their ranks. No longer content with writing columns of feminine gossip on the events of the day—which duty, it was alleged, had now often to be undertaken by men—or describing fashionable weddings and functions of special interest to her sex, she now undertook the most arduous duties of their profession, and did not even shrink from accepting the position of a war correspondent. They were glad to have the names of many of those talented ladies on the roll of their Institute, and they had no objection to an increase in their numbers.

The conference was resumed on Tuesday morning in the hall of Lincoln's Inn, Sir James Henderson presiding, when an important paper was read by Mr. J. Andrew Strahan, Hon. Counsel to the Institute, on the subject of 'The Reporter and the Law of Copyright.' Opening his remarks with a reference to the recent decision of the House of Lords in 'Walter v. Lane,' he stated that that decision had been received without surprise by the few lawyers who had made a systematic study of the law of copyright, and proved by a quotation from 'The Law of the Press,' by himself and Mr. Fisher, published in 1898, that the decision had been anticipated. There was no injustice to Lord Rosebery. He had no claim in either law or equity to the copyright of a report which another person had produced. But for the reporter that particular report would not have existed, and there would have been no document from which copies could have been made. What the critics of the judgment thought was that the labour of the reporter should create in Lord Rosebery a property he would not otherwise possess. It was somewhat difficult to see where the justice of such a contention came in. Some people thought it absurd to refuse to a speaker the right to reproduce his speech. That was precisely, however, what the judgment did not do. Lord Rosebery was in no way debarred from publishing his own reports.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., alluded to the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Walter v. Lane as extremely interesting, especially as five highly trained legal intellects were on one side and four on the other. If ever there was a case in which it was justifiable on the part of a newspaper to assert its rights, this was such a case. He did not, however, think that the decision would be so far-reaching as had been supposed. If Lord Rosebery wished to reproduce his speeches, and used even the report of a newspaper, it would be doubtful whether any court would grant an injunction, and if the worst happened, the damages against Lord Rosebery would be so small that even his limited means would cover them easily. He was of opinion that newspaper articles and reports should be better protected than at present. Journalists should not live upon one another, and he was glad to know that a Bill had been prepared to further that view.

Mr. H. W. Strong then read a paper on 'The Position of the Editor of To-day.' He described this as essentially different from what it was fifty, nay ten, years ago. The fortunes of the paper were no longer under his supreme control. If success attended the venture there were other claimants for the kudos. If it failed, the editor must expect to bear the lion's share of the responsibility, whether or not he deserved it. Less and less did he determine policy on vital issues. In certain journalistic quarters there appeared to be a disposition not only to accept the new situation with complacency, but to disclaim any peculiar virtue or dignity in the office of editor. It behoved all of them to resist this encroachment, and to uphold the privileges of a position which had long been the objective of an honourable ambition.

In the course of the proceedings it was announced that Mr. Arthur W. à Beckett had been unanimously chosen President for next year.

The meetings of the conference were resumed on Wednesday morning in the hall of Lincoln's Inn, the President in the chair. The following motion was brought forward by Mr. Jesse Quail: 'That the Copyright Bill recently before Parliament was unsatisfactory, inasmuch as Clause 12, in attempting to institute copyright in news, gives no protection to the individual journalist who supplies news, but only to the newspaper proprietor or the news agency which publishes it, and fails to show how news which has become common property (as it does on publication) can be made the basis of an action without undue restraint of journalistic enterprise and freedom; and this conference is of opinion that a clause which more strictly defines the right of a reporter or contributor in the literary form of his report or communication, will be of more value to the working journalist than any attempt to create copyright in news qua news.' After an amendment to strike out everything after the words 'who supplies news' had been rejected by a large majority, the motion was agreed to.

Miss O'Reilly then proposed: 'That editors be discouraged from inviting contributions to their journals from persons of wealth and position, thus depriving of valuable space those who are journalists by profession, and who have no means of living except by their profession.' Miss Drew, having had a large experience of titled ladies who wrote for the papers, declared that not one in thirty was the authoress of the articles she supplied. They bought the productions, hiring some poor starving woman to do the work. These ladies were prompted by a thirst to get their names in the newspapers, and, said Miss Drew, amid laughter, 'I hate them.' Several other members having spoken, the motion was adopted by a large majority.

There was a large attendance at the concluding sitting of the conferences on Wednesday afternoon at the Hotel Cecil. The chief item of interest was an address by Mr. E. T. Reed on 'Humour in Black and White,' illustrated by lantern enlargements of many of his best known sketches. 'The unfortunate being who elects to work in the field of graphic humour,' said Mr. Reed, 'must range far and wide in pursuit of inspiration. Like some eager and elderly entomologist, he must stalk his subject with untiring enthusiasm; his well-poised net ready to swoop down on every promising moth that may flutter across his vision, and when by good fortune he lands some gaudy specimen of a new genus his joy is indescribable. Occasionally a real windfall of humour occurs in some public event, or in the providential advent of a political personage whose face and figure are unmistakable. Perhaps, for instance, no more genuine piece of good fortune has befallen the caricaturist than that the personality of Mr. Kruger should be what it is.' Speaking of 'Prehistoric Peeps,' Mr. Reed said that he thought they had given him more pleasure in production than any of his works. At first he had misgivings lest many peaceful old ladies and other timid and law-abiding persons should fail to see the charm of the knock-about habits that prevailed in primeval times, but rather to his amazement and satisfaction, not the slightest remonstrance had been made. As a rule in his caricatures of Members of Parliament his efforts had been received in the most forgiving spirit—indeed, they had usually cried for more. He had always endeavoured to get the maximum of humour with the minimum of offence—not always a simple task where the border line between gaiety and malice is so imperceptible and so easily transgressed.

The more serious work of the conference in its deliberations has been pleasantly varied by a dinner at the Hotel Cecil on Tuesday evening, and a conversazione in the Guildhall (by invitation of the City Corporation) on Wednesday evening.

THE PARIS INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF LITERARY AND ARTISTIC PROPERTY

AND A PROJECTED LAW OF INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

The most important result of the International Congress of Literary and Artistic Copyright recently held in Paris has been the drafting of a law to be submitted as a model for copyright legislation to those countries desirous of securing the protection of literary and artistic property.

On the occasion of the Congress held in Dresden in 1895, the International Literary and Artistic Association presented a study of the principles which might serve as a basis for the unification of laws on the rights of authors in the countries adhering to the Berne Convention. These principles were accepted by the Congress, and the Association was entrusted with the drawing up of a scheme for legislating on the subject. A draft of the scheme was submitted to the Congress of Berne in 1896, then reconsidered at the Congress at Monaco, and sanctioned, in a revised version, by the Congress of Turin in 1898. The Organising Commission of the Paris Congress of 1900 thought fit again to discuss the scheme in an amended form, so as to invest it, if possible, with yet more authority. M. Georges Maillard, the general reporter, plainly stated that this typical scheme of legislation is no ideal and theoretical project, but is intended to fix the principal elements on which a unified code of legislation could be based with the least possible delay. He added that it constitutes the minimum of protection it seems expedient to claim at present.

It is scarcely expected that this law will be accepted word for word in any country, but rather that it will be modified according to the requirements and legal usages of each.

In those lands where the law courts have limited power in deciding cases, and the legislature gives the solution of private cases, it will of necessity be completed. In the opinion of the Congress, however, it ought to suffice in countries where the laws used are concise and only lay down principles which jurisprudence develops.

The principle that no intellectual creation ought to remain unprotected having been accepted by the Congress, it was decided that this protection ought to be assured to every work of the intellect (œuvre de l'intelligence), the expression proposed by M. Pesce, and which comprises, besides literary and artistic works, scientific and engineering productions, provided they are not of an industrial nature belonging to the domain of patents. It is also expressly understood that section 1, which includes all works of the graphic and plastic arts, includes also architectural and photographic works. Protection is also given to works which have appeared in periodicals.

The duration of copyright has been fixed by the Congress at eighty years after the death of the author. When an author has not made known his name the protection was fixed at eighty years from the date of first publication.

The principle of the equality of rights of collaborators on a common work and on its indivisibleness was amended by the addition of the words 'unless contrary stipulations are made.'

Posthumous works shall also be protected for eighty years from date of publication in the person of their publisher. The scheme frees the author from all the restrictions on the right of translation and the right of performance by which his rights are paralysed in many countries. No work can be illustrated or adapted for theatrical performance without the consent of its author.

The Congress decided, on the suggestion of M. Alaunoary, reporter of the commission on authorised borrowings, that only the analysis of a work and short textual quotations be permitted. The publication of official documents (actes officiels) and judicial decisions is unrestricted. As regards speeches made in deliberative assemblies and public meetings (that is to say, especially political meetings), they may be reproduced for purposes of information or discussion. On the other hand, the pleadings of counsel before a court, the lectures of professors, or the speeches of an orator may not be published in a collected edition without permission.

M. Jules Lermina delivered an eloquent address on the moral rights of the author (le droit moral de l'auteur), 'which,' he said, 'originates in the exercise of those creative faculties belonging to him and depending on the constitution of his intellect. This right is the very essence of literary and artistic property; it is its substratum and remains attached in an indelible manner to the author's active and thinking personality. The fact of having created a work confers on the author a right against which no contrary pretension may prevail, a right on which he can in all cases base his claims, and which ought to be respected in all its plenitude. Every author, in virtue of this moral right, is justified in opposing every alteration made by another in the work he has conceived and executed.

'After the author's death, the moral right remains attached to the work which has emanated from his thinking faculties. Should the author's heirs think that for some reasons they ought to make some alterations in his work, they ought to respect the moral right attaching to it by clearly and expressly mentioning the changes in such a way that the author's memory may not incur any responsibility for changes not made by him.'

As the result of this address the Congress determined to vote legal penalties to protect the author's moral as well as his material rights.

Elegant.—A student in a college which shall be nameless recently delivered himself as follows: 'Thithero ith a heap eathier to read than Virgil, becauthe when I come to a plathe in Thithero I don't understand, I jutht turn to cuthin' Catiline, and I generally hit it.'

THE LATE JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

To the September number of Scribner's Magazine Mr. W. D. Howells contributes some extremely interesting reminiscences of Lowell during the time that the writer was brought into intimate relationship with him—that is, from 1865 onwards. The paper opens with the account of a visit paid to Lowell at Elmwood, Cambridge, in order to present him with an inkstand which the donor had brought from Italy. It was rather an ugly affair, and it is characteristic of Lowell's kindly nature that he at once placed it in the middle of his writing table, where it remained for twenty-five years—totally destitute of ink!

Howells of course was a much younger man than Lowell, and had somewhat of the reverence that a pupil shows for a much beloved master. He was invited to supper, and afterwards retired with his host for 'a night of talk' in his study. Arrived in this sanctum, Lowell 'lighted his pipe, and from the depths of his easy-chair invited my shy youth to all the ease it was capable of in his presence. It was not much; I loved him, and he had given me reason to think that he was fond of me, but I was always aware in him of an older and closer and stricter civilisation, an unbroken tradition, a more authoritative status. His democracy was more of the head and mine more of the heart, and his denied the equality which mine affirmed. But his nature was so noble and his reason so tolerant that whenever in our long acquaintance I found it well to come to open rebellion, as I more than once did, he admitted my right of insurrection, and never resented the outbreak. He even suffered being taxed with inconsistency, and where he saw that he had not been quite just, he would take punishment for his error with a contrition that was sometimes humorous and always touching.'

The next year Howells was appointed assistant editor of the Atlantic Monthly, and went to live in Cambridge, where the magazine was printed. He was thus brought into closer connection with Lowell. For a time the latter seemed almost to hold him at a distance, but eventually they became the best of friends. 'Hardly a week of any kind of weather passed but he mounted the steps to the door of the little house in which I lived, two miles away from him, and asked me to walk. These walks continued, I suppose, until Lowell went abroad for a winter in the early seventies. They took us all over Cambridge, which he knew and loved every inch of, and led us afield through the straggling, unhandsome outskirts, bedrabbled with squalid Irish neighbourhoods, and fraying off into marshes and salt meadows. He liked to indulge an excess of admiration for the local landscape, and though I never heard him profess a preference for the Charles River flats to the finest Alpine scenery, I could well believe he would do so under provocation of a fit listener's surprise. He had always so much of the boy in him that he liked to tease the over-serious or over-sincere.'

After a time the intimacy grew so strong that it became a fixed agreement that Howells should dine at Elmwood once a week. 'After the meal we turned into his study, where we sat before a wood fire in winter, and he smoked and talked.' Apparently Lowell was fond of congenial sympathetic company, the kindred soul that understood his nature, and could appreciate and readily follow his train of thought. 'If he liked you, he liked being with you, not for what he got but for what he gave. He was fond of one man whom I recall as the most silent man I ever met. I never heard him say anything, not even a dull thing, but Lowell delighted in him, and would have you believe that he was full of quaint humour.'

Lowell was very sensitive to criticism, especially from those whose good opinion he valued. 'He would try to hide his hurt, and he would not let you speak of it, as though your sympathy unmanned him, but you could see that he suffered. This notably happened in my remembrance from a review in a journal which he greatly esteemed; and once when in a notice of my own I had put one little thorny point among the flowers, he confessed a puncture from it. He praised the criticism hardily, but I knew that he winced under my recognition of the didactic quality which he had not quite guarded himself against in the poetry otherwise praised. He liked your liking, and he openly rejoiced in it; and I suppose he made himself believe that in trying his verse with his friends he was testing it; but I do not believe that he was, and I do not think that he ever corrected his judgment by theirs, however he suffered from it.' Indeed, throughout the whole of Mr. Howell's remembrances the intensely human side of Lowell's characteristics stands prominent. No doubt some people might say that there was more than a touch of vanity in his extreme sensitiveness to what the world might think of him, but somehow it was of so kindly a character, so perfectly inoffensive in its attributes, that it seemed rather to be a rare quality than an actual flaw, no matter how slight, of disposition.

Both by nature and tradition, Lowell was thoroughly romantic, and perhaps the greatest point of difference between him and Howells was on the subject of fiction. 'He could not or would not suffer realism in any but a friend. He steadfastly refused even to read the Russian masters, to his immense loss, as I tried to persuade him; and even among the modern Spaniards, for whom he might have had a sort of personal kindness from his love of Cervantes, he chose one for his praise the least worthy of it, and bore me down with his heavier metal in argument when I opposed to Alarcon's factitiousness the delightful genuineness of Valdés. Ibsen, with all the Norwegians, he put far from him; he would no more know them than the Russians; the French naturalists he abhorred. I thought him all wrong, but you do not try improving your elders when they have come to three score and ten years, and I would rather have had his affection unbroken by our difference of opinion than a perfect agreement.'

'I believe,' concludes Mr. Howells, 'neither in heroines nor in saints; but I believe in great and good men, and among such men Lowell was the richest nature I have known. His nature was not always serene and pellucid; it was sometimes roiled by the currents that counter and cross in all of us; but it was without the least alloy of insincerity, and it was never darkened by the shadow of a selfish fear. His genius was an instrument that responded in affluent harmony to the power that made him a humorist and that made him a poet, and appointed him rarely to be quite either alone.'

RECENT FRENCH PUBLICATIONS IN POPULAR SCIENCE.

In 'Notre Globe,' par E. Sieurin (Paris, Schleicher Frères), we have not only a description of the planet on which we live, but also the history of its origin, formation, and of its various and unceasing changes. 'It is,' says the author, 'the history of the Earth which we wish to relate.' This wish he has successfully accomplished in the clearly printed and handy volume before us, which forms one of the series 'Bibliothèque d'Histoire et de Géographie Universelles,' and contains 80 engravings and maps, and an index. The book is in all respects worthy of the subject and its treatment, which is admirable. No speedier or pleasanter way of gaining a knowledge of Our Globe is imaginable than by the perusal of M. Sieurin's delightfully written manual.

About fifteen years ago, in a little volume called 'Mécanisme de l'entendement,' an attempt was made by M. Pierre Hachet-Souplet to give a scientific explanation of the conscience and its origin. In his 'Examen psychologique des Animaux' (same publishers) we obtain an insight into one of the most interesting regions of scientific research, in which we are taught to compare our own human understanding with the manifestations of reason and understanding among animals. By creating a laboratory of experimental and comparative psychology, in which he carried out some most interesting experiments in the training of various animals, M. Pierre Hachet-Souplet has endeavoured to establish a new experimental method of classifying species from a scientific standpoint. His theory that 'the phenomenon of human thought is not isolated, and that the explanation of its origin is contained in the general law of evolution,' he supports and illustrates by the description of experiments in the training of various animals which are all the more valuable because made by himself, and because he is avowedly sceptical as to all stories about animals told by their owners, who are seldom unprejudiced narrators. This is a volume to be read by all friends of animals, or by those in any way interested in them.

'Problèmes de Philosophie positive,' par Guillaume de Greef (same publishers), is a new volume of the 'Bibliothèque internationale des Sciences Sociologiques,' containing two essays, one entitled 'Enseignement intégral,' the other 'Inconnaissable.' The purpose of the former is to show that instruction and education ought to be homogeneous; that of the latter to demonstrate that the unknowable is only a relative expression. Both subjects are treated in a masterly fashion.

'La Photographie des Couleurs,' par C. Ruckert (same publishers), is a clearly written treatise on a most interesting branch of photography, and is beautifully illustrated with forty-one text figures and four coloured plates. It forms a volume of the useful series, 'Les Livres d'Or de la Science.'

'La Musique des Couleurs,' par L. Faire (same publishers), is a pleasantly written study on the subject of which it treats, a subject still belonging to the Music of the Future, although it was treated by E. T. A. Hoffmann in his 'Kreisleriana,' published more than seventy years ago. This interesting essay is an acceptable addition to the series 'Bibliothèque des Méthodes dans les Beaux-Arts.'

UNAUTHORISED GERMAN TRANSLATIONS AND THE RIGHTS OF FOREIGN AUTHORS.

In the issue for September 3 of the Bärsenblatt, Herr Robert Lutz, of Stuttgart, calls attention to a matter gravely affecting the interests of foreign authors and publishers. 'Germany,' he writes, 'is the country in which most translations appear, and the persons principally engaged in the translating industry are women, especially schoolmistresses and governesses; but, unfortunately, we frequently find that many among them are quite devoid of knowledge as to international copyright laws, or are not very punctilious as to violating them. Quite recently I have surprised two female translators in attacks on my publishing rights. One of them had published an unauthorised translation of Barrie's "A Window in Thrums"; the other had dealt in the same way with one of Conan Doyle's detective stories. Former experiences of the same kind rank with these two cases. For instance, I once received the offer of the translation of one of Rider Haggard's stories, which a lady had published in a large Berlin newspaper. On inquiring of this lady if she had an authorisation so to act, she was obliged to admit that she had not, and when I advised her subsequently to obtain the authorisation, she was evidently annoyed that I had opened her eyes and made her sensible of her delinquency. In all cases of the kind which have come to my knowledge, these ladies either pleaded ignorance of literary conventions or else one said that she translated to make pocket money; another for benevolent purposes; a third because she was a widow who wanted to bring up her children! They often called their translations "adaptations" (Bearbeitungen). They evidently think they may appropriate the matter and manner of a story if they only give a free rendering of it, and some go so far in their exploitation as even to suppress the author's name. Male translators also supply a contingent to this dishonest translating trade. How many cases of violation of their copyrights never come to the knowledge of foreign authors, as the latter only quite by chance come to hear of the attack on their rights! The trespassers on this domain of copyright have correspondingly increased with the extension of literary conventions, since there is no longer much ownerless property left, and so it is time that attention at length be called in the press to this evil. The press itself can contribute to the bettering of this state of affairs by keeping a sharp control over all offers of translations and "adaptations" by inquiring as to their authorisation.'

'THE CHASE OF THE RUBY.'

Among the cases set down for decision by Mr. Justice Farwell, sitting as Vacation Judge last week, was that of Tillotson & Son v. Skeffington, in which the plaintiffs sought an injunction to restrain the defendants from publishing 'The Chase of the Ruby,' a novel by Mr. Richard Marsh, until a month after the completion of the book in serial form.

Mr. Maughan, for the plaintiffs, said on December 31, 1898, they purchased from Mr. Marsh the serial rights in certain stories, including a short novel entitled 'The Chase of the Ruby,' and an agreement was arrived at that the story should not be published in book form till a month after the completion of its appearance as a serial. After that agreement, Mr. Marsh went to the defendants and sold them the right to publish the novel in book form, and entered into a contract which provided that the date of the publication should be September or October 1900. Messrs. Tillotson had so far been unable to place the story in serial form, and it had not yet been published. Messrs. Skeffington had had notice of the plaintiffs' serial rights, and he asked for an injunction. He understood that Messrs. Skeffington had incurred great expense in entering into negotiations for the publication of the book in America. The person in the wrong was, he contended, Mr. Marsh, and the defendants had done nothing which could be objected to on the score of fair dealing as between publishers. He asked that the motion should stand for trial, and that he might have leave to amend the writ so as to join Mr. Marsh as defendant.

The Judge assented to this as a reasonable course.

Mr. Mulligan, Q.C., for the defendants, maintained that they had a clear agreement for the publication of the book this month or next. It was, in fact, in type, and ready for publication. He objected to the allegation that Mr. Marsh was in the wrong, believing it was rather the plaintiffs, who ought not, he thought, to publish their serial story.

Mr. Maughan: Then I have permission to amend the writ, and add other names to the parties?

The Judge: Yes.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'From a Bachelor Uncle's Diary,' by Fox Russell. The trials of a middle-aged bachelor under the infliction of various visits of two harum-scarum madcap nephews, accompanied by a schoolmate, are amusingly related in this little volume, though we can remember the situation to have been more comically described by previous martyrs to the vagaries of youth. The book is written in the 'Happy Thoughts' style so familiar to the readers of Punch (where the sketches originally appeared), but lacks the natural humour and droll situations of that popular series. The illustrations of Mr. R. C. Carter are thoroughly in keeping with the character of the narrative. The volume forms the latest addition to Arrowsmith's well-known 'Bristol Library.'

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'The Silent Gate: a Voyage into Prison,' by Tighe Hopkins. A varied assortment of convict stories are included in this volume, some pathetic, some humorous, all throbbing with a deep humanity. One may be taken as a fair specimen of the rest. John James Turk, otherwise known as 'Turkey,' is a young boy who has been sent to prison for three months. He is a strangely whimsical lad, 'fair-haired and freckled, a sparrow-like frame, and an expression rather like that of Doré's neophyte among the unspiritual monks.' From the first he takes his prison discipline and restrictions in quite a wrong spirit. So far from being ashamed or depressed, he is actually in high spirits over his position, feels proud of associating with the more hardened criminals of the place, and looks forward to the time when he shall go out among his boy pals with the swagger reputation of an 'old hand.' He is, in fact, immensely proud of having got into prison—'where you're treated, not as a boy, but as a proper criminal, and have your rights'—and evidently regards it as a new start in life. Burglary on a big scale is his chief ambition, and he thinks that having now got over the initiatory steps he will be able to pal with 'wide' men. If not burglary, would prefer to go to sea 'on a ship like he saw in the docks once.' Luckily for poor Turkey, fate throws him in the way of the latter career, and he eventially becomes mate of the Rosa Walker, when, we are assured, if anyone were to tell him of his early experience he would repudiate it, with language. All the stories are good, and they have just that amount of light character study which is certain to amuse and interest the reader.

From Messrs. Lamley & Co.—'An Illustrated Historical Handbook to the Parish of Chelsea,' by Reginald Blunt. Chelsea, it is needless to say, possesses many interesting associations, and of these Mr. Blunt has taken full advantage in his volume. The connection of Sir Thomas More, J. W. M. Turner, Leigh Hunt, Thomas Carlyle, George Eliot, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, and others, with the parish is duly commented upon, and the history of all the old buildings very faithfully described. A feature of the book is the large number of excellent illustrations which give point and reality to the word-pictures of the text, and a word of commendation should also be awarded to the neat and artistic production of the volume as a whole. Mr. Blunt has evidently taken much care in the preparation of his work, and his efforts deserve to meet with the approval of the public.

From Mr. John Long.—'On Parole,' by Mina Doyle (Mrs. Charles W. Young). It is certainly not given to every man to run away with his own wife from the man who has ensnared her, but this is what happens to John Armstrong, the principal character of this story. Or rather, we should scarcely use the term 'run away with,' since this implies companionship, whereas the husband in the present case only separates his erring wife from her paramour. He takes her to his country house, and there installs her in the west wing of the building. Some years previously Armstrong had visited the stalls of the Frivolity Theatre, had been smitten with the beautiful actress, Violet Forrest, and had married her. She subsequently repaid his devotion by eloping with an Italian actor, who brutally ill-treated her. Armstrong now comes to the rescue by taking her under his protection. From this action a whole string of circumstances proceed, which, though somewhat unnatural and exaggerated, are likely to excite the reader's interest. Ultimately all ends happily, and husband and wife are again united.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'Gas Engine Construction,' by Henry V. A. Parsell, Jun., and Arthur J. Weed. This is a practical treatise describing the theory and principles of the action of gas engines of various types, and the design and construction of a half horse-power gas engine, with illustrations of the work in actual progress, together with dimensioned working drawings giving clearly the sizes of the various details. The main feature of the book is that it not only supplies the amateur with a broad and thorough knowledge of the principles of various forms of gas engines, but shows him how to make such a machine in all its practical shop methods. Commencing with a chapter on 'How the Gas Engine Works,' the authors take the reader over every detail of its construction, explaining their meaning where necessary by excellent drawings: cylinder, piston, connecting rod, bearings, side rod, bed plate, fly-wheels, cylinder head, inlet valve, exhaust valve, governor, igniter, and electrical connections are all in due course expatiated on, and their importance in the internal economy of the machine thoroughly explained. The illustrations are particularly numerous and valuable, the method having been followed of photographing each important step in the building up of the engine, and making a cut from the photograph. There are many other excellent works on this subject, but none that so practically enters into its various details.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Seen and the Unseen,' by Richard Marsh. Lovers of the gruesome in fiction will find a rare field for their exploration in this collection of short stories. The first of the series supplies a very fair idea of the remainder, though all are not conceived in so ghastly a spirit. Two men find themselves alone in the room of an hotel. One of these men has in previous days made an attempt—believed to have been successful—to murder the other. The victim is now about to take his revenge, and he kills his opponent by simply terrifying him with a mechanical toy, an elaborated arrangement of the old-fashioned Jack-in-the-box. The story is wildly improbable, a species of mental phantasy, but it has interest. The same may be said of the other contents of the volume. Mr. Marsh has rarely shown his powerful imagination to more striking advantage, and his creations are likely to rivet the attention of the reader from their perfect originality.

From the Oxford University Press.—'Notes on a Century of Typography at the University Press, Oxford, 1693-1794, with Annotations and Appendices,' by Horace Hart, M.A. The early history of the different founts of the Oxford University Press, and the way in which they were gathered together, will be particularly interesting to all who are concerned in the subject of printing; and it is to the representation and cataloguing of the old types, matrices, and punches, as they remain in Oxford to this day, that Mr. Hart, who it is almost needless to say is the printer to the University and Controller of the University Press, mainly devotes himself. The reason why the period between 1693 and 1794 is especially selected for discussion is that no printed specimen of types was issued by the Oxford Press before the earlier, and none after the later, date—or at any rate, if they were issued, no copies are extant. The earliest Oxford printing was executed with characters brought from Cologne; and when in the seventeenth century the University Press wished to extend their types, they sent to Germany, France, and Holland for them. Type-founding was not authorised in England until 1637; and apparently most of the University specimens came from Holland, where, through the generous benefactions of Fell and Junius, they purchased not only types, but matrices and sometimes punches as well—the latter a somewhat unbusinesslike proceeding, it would seem, and wholly unnecessary. Altogether there are no less than 7,632 of these old matrices at the University Press, together with 2,906 punches, and we can quite understand that the tracing, classifying, and arranging alphabetically of this large collection must have involved labour and painstaking research of no ordinary kind. The volume itself, of course, is of a nature principally to interest the practical printer; but even to the ordinary reader of books it presents many features of attraction. Thus it is curious to contrast these old-time printings with our present range of types, and to note the influence of the old-fashioned style that is still dimly observable to-day. In the first two appendices Mr. Hart gives some interesting specimens of devices and ornaments, ancient wood engravings, &c. We may compliment him on the praiseworthy zeal he has shown in the prosecution of a purely technical subject, which must to so large an extent have been a labour of love. We should also mention the extremely creditable production of the volume.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'The Divine Pedigree of Man, or the Testimony of Evolution and Psychology to the Fatherhood of God,' by Thomson Jay Hudson, LL.D. This work, in the words of the author, is written for the benefit of 'that large and constantly enlarging class of men who are imbued with the ultra-scientific dogma that nothing in either physical science or spiritual philosophy is worthy of belief if it is not confirmed by a series of well-authenticated facts—a congeries of observable natural phenomena.' The work is divided into two parts, respectively treating in an interesting and penetrative manner of Evolution and Psychology, and Psychology and Christian Theisms. The conclusion at which Dr. Jay Hudson eventually arrives is that there can be no higher conception of divine knowledge—nay, that there can exist no higher wisdom than that which is indicated in the word 'omniscience'; that there can exist no greater power than is described in the word 'omnipotence'; that there can be no broader conception of the all-pervasiveness of that wisdom and that power than is implied in the word 'omnipresence'; and, finally, that the human mind can conceive of no quality or attribute of the divine personality of greater promise and potency than that implied in the words 'infinite and universal love.' To some people it may seem that this is rather a feeble conclusion (though prettily expressed) to arrive at after some three hundred pages of profound reasoning, and that the opinion might just as well have been expressed at the outset; but, on the other hand, they should certainly be grateful for the many interesting by-paths of religious thought into which the author in the course of his treatise leads them. It is a book that should have many attractions for the theologian.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The Belle of Toorak,' by E. W. Hornung. There is always something rather attractive about a story of the bush—its very free-and-easy attributes, freedom from the enervating restrictions of highly civilised life, and vigorous outdoor incidents, form an agreeable contrast to the modern drawing-room society novel. And so it is with Mr. Hornung's work. Critically considered, the story has little in it, being mainly dependent, so far as plot is concerned, on the misunderstandings that arise between two young people through the sudden appearance of the supposed ruffianly father of the man; but it is pleasantly interesting all the same. A clever sketch is also given of the brother of the lady, a gentleman whose avocation in life is to destroy with merciless malice the illusions of other people, and who takes as much quiet pleasure in the sport as another man would do in securing a 'good bag.' There are the outlines of a really good character study in Theodore Bethune; and we think the author might advantageously elaborate it for use in some more ambitious work.

From the same.—'A Second Coming,' by Richard Marsh. There is little to be said about this work, except that it is in very questionable taste. It is supposed to represent the second coming of our Lord, and the effect of His appearance on the ordinary events of human life.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'A Day in the Cloister,' adapted from the German of Dom Sebastian von Oer, O.S.B., of St. Martin's Abbey, Beuron, by Dom Bede Camm, O.S.B. Mr. Camm's work gives to some extent a description of life in a modern monastery, about which the public has been so exceedingly curious of late. The material of the volume was originally a literary translation made by a nun of St. Scholastica's Priory, Atherstone, and placed in the hands of the present writer with a view to publication; but since then it has been largely altered, condensed, and rewritten, so that it is now more of an adaptation than a translation. In the various chapters the author speaks of the Monastery Door (as typical of the first step into monastic life), the Cloisters, the Statue of the Founder, Night, the Divine Office, Morning, Labour, the High Mass and the Monastery Church, the Abbot, the Frater or Refectory, Recreation, the Lay Brothers, the Library, the Sacristy, the Novitiate, &c., concluding with the Departure, meaning thereby the death of the monk. We have turned with interest to some remarks on the reasons that induce men to become monks. The young man, if asked, says our author, would 'probably answer: "In order to dedicate all my powers to Him who has called me into His service" ... "in order to labour to God without reserve, and to learn to love Him more and more, putting off [illegible] years and gentler bearing. "In order to die [illegible] grey in the cloister; and he it is who hits the [illegible] and the last and [illegible]'

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co.—'The Witchery of Books,' by John F. Crump. This volume practically consists of a number of quotations culled from various well-known writers, living and dead, on subjects connected with books, arranged in short chapters, and connected together by a thread of Mr. Crump's own devising. Such headings as 'The Dainties bred in a Book,' 'Promethean Fire,' 'Immortality of Ideas,' 'Thought Seeds,' 'The Refining Influence of Books,' 'Spiritual Kinship,' 'Books and Business,' and so forth, will give the reader some idea of the nature of these chapters. We may say that though we have every appreciation of Mr. Crump's sentiments in the matter of books, we can scarcely compliment him on the depth of his reasoning. The following quotation is taken from the chapter on '"Matter Moulded" Thought': 'In books a man will say what he would never have uttered to his dearest friend. In them he shakes off all his reserve and lays bare his most sacred feelings, his most cherished thoughts, his deepest convictions. By their instrumentality the amplest opportunities are afforded for making acquaintance with the purest and noblest thoughts of our fellow men, and learning the possibilities of human nature at its best.' This seems to us a little far-fetched, and in some respects hardly true. As for the statement that a man will say in his books what he would never utter to his dearest friend, it might fairly be retorted that a man will say to his friend what no power on earth could induce him to put in a book. The argument cuts both ways.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'A History of Norway from the Earliest Times,' by Hjalmar H. Boyesen, with a new chapter on the recent history of Norway by C. F. Keary ('Story of the Nations' Series). The history of few countries is so little known to the general reader as that of Norway. He probably associates with the name Vikings, deeds of daring and mighty achievements (many of them probably fabulous) with terrible two-edged swords, but that is all. Norway, in short, has been cut off from the rest of Europe, and it is only within recent years that the talent of Björnson, Ibsen, Sars, Grieg, Abel, Aason, Jonas Lie, Kielland and others in their various walks of life has opened up communication with the outside world. Of the interest of the late Professor Boyesen's work it is scarcely necessary to speak. He was thoroughly imbued with a love of his subject, and whether writing of the origin of the Norsemen, the age of the Vikings, the different kings who held sway, rom Halfdan the Swarthy onwards, or the various events that distinguished their sovereignty, he has always managed to bring out the picturesque aspect of his subject, and to render his history delightful in the telling. Only at one period in his work does he lose something of his bright method. This is when Norway was united to Denmark, and for a time may be said to have lost all individuality. However, she eventually recovered her independence as we all know, and her progress since has been strongly marked. Mr. Keary's chapter, in which he brings the history up to the present date, is rather short, but seems to cover all the important events of the time.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Under Fate's Wheel: a Story of Mystery, Love, and the Bicycle,' by Lawrence L. Lynch (E. Murdoch van Deventer). The plot of this novel is a little involved, and the reader's interest is likely to waver from want of a clearly-defined outline. The mystery is supplied through the impersonation by a retired officer of his dead comrade, and the love element consists of certain entanglements in which he has engaged himself with the wild, untamed daughter of a ranche keeper in Wyoming whose passing under his right name, together with his subsequent attachment for another girl. The latter episode brings about his death, for in a moment of violent passion he attempts to carry her off, and is shot—it is supposed by another and more favoured suitor. It eventually transpires, however, that the real criminal is the jealous young person from Wyoming, who accomplishes the deed by means of a noiseless air gun, and who fires, strangely enough, almost at the same instant as lover number two with an ordinary report-sounding rifle. The story is brought to a conclusion with a general settling up of misunderstandings and much charitable talk. As for the bicycle, it simply pervades the narrative from end to end, and we hear so much of the 'wheel' as to be intolerably sick of the subject.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'Town Lady and Country Lass,' by Florence Warden. We should imagine this story has been written with a view to subsequent dramatisation, if, indeed, the drama has not preceded the book. The plot is principally unfolded by action, the descriptive matter being cut down to a minimum, and it is possible even to portion off the various scenes of the play. Thus the first four chapters, in which manly Dick Wargrave, son of a Yorkshire squire, at the time of George II., is represented as having incurred his father's displeasure by a crime of which his crafty cousin, Bernard Haynes, is actually the perpetrator, would form the prologue; and we can quite imagine the arrangement of the stage at the fall of the curtain—hero at gate going out (prompt side), with last long farewell look (forcibly heightened by burnt cork) at sweet lovable heroine, who, with arms beseechingly outstretched, has imparted the due amount of responsible tenderness to her gaze; outside, jaunting recruiting sergeant, brave in his show of ribbons and in high spirits from having obtained so valuable an adherent; in the background, base villain, whose expression of face conveys his fiendish pleasure at the success of his strategy; on the house steps, foolish old father dismissing the reprobate with much the same gestures that the immortal Mr. Pecksniff sent forth poor Tom Pinch to the outside world; general crowd of guests, servants, stable men, and other awe-struck retainers. And so with the remainder of the chapters. To speak candidly, 'Town Lady and Country Lass' is exceedingly shallow and theatrical throughout, and there is no great situation or dominant purpose in the story to carry the reader's attention over the artificial expressions and manners of the period—the ''Fore Gads,' 'Slap my vitals,' ceremonious curtseys, and so forth—with which the book abounds. Even the authoress seems to have felt that there was a need for greater contrast among the characters, for she introduces a sottish major of quite a different order from the rest; but he becomes a perfect nuisance, though possibly he might be made a fairly amusing character on the stage, since he is always most uninterestingly and vulgarly drunk. Even as a play we imagine the story would have to be considerably strengthened in places to meet with anything like success.

New Editions. Messrs. Methuen have issued in their 'Novelist' series Anthony Hope's 'Man of Mark.' Though scarcely exhibiting the author at his best, it is an interesting story which will pleasantly hold the reader's attention throughout.—From Messrs. Macmillan & Co. comes in sixpenny form 'Miranda of the Balcony,' by A. E. D. Mason. The author deals in romantic contrasts a safe card to play in fiction; and though he has scarcely utilised his skill in this direction to the same advantage as in 'The Courtship of Maurice Buckler,' his story is certain to command a large following of readers.—'The Scarlet City,' that amusing work in which the well-known Bohemians 'Pot' and 'Swears' record the adventures of John Franklyn and his friend Anthony Fuller in and round about the wicked world in the second half of the nineteenth century, has been issued in a new edition by Messrs. Sands & Co. It is especially suited for after dinner consumption, when the mind, mellowed by the wine and the walnuts (to say nothing of the real turtle and the quails on toast) is in its more charitable, broad-minded condition.—Mr. John Long has issued a sixpenny edition, excellently printed in large type, of 'Father Anthony,' by Robert Buchanan. The story is a capital specimen of the author's best work, vigorously written, bold in its character portrayal, and skilfully constructed.—From Messrs. Greening & Co. comes a new and cheaper edition of that highly imaginative work, 'An Uncanny Girl,' by Marie M. Sadleir.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

THE RISE OF WELLINGTON

BY

Field-Marshal Lord ROBERTS, V.C.

[THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

'A very interesting study of Wellington, with many curious sidelights on his character, is supplied by Lord Roberts's little book, "The Rise of Wellington." Here a soldier, as sympathetic to his men as the Duke was unsympathetic, discusses with a soldier's eye and a soldier's plainness and frankness the main points of Wellington's career, and deplores, as we have done, the Duke's attacks upon the men who served under him.'—SPECTATOR.

NEW WORK OF FICTION by FRANK SAVILE.

THE BLESSING OF ESAU

A Romance of the Marchlands.

By FRANK SAVILE,

Author of 'John Ship, Mariner,' 'Beyond the Great South Wall,' &c.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 6s.

[READY SHORTLY.

MRS. GLADSTONE

The Life, Good Works, and Political Efforts of Catherine Gladstone.

By EDWIN A. PRATT

Author of 'Pioneer Women in Victoria's Reign.'

With Photogravure Portraits and other Illustrations.

PREFATORY NOTE

'The record of Mrs. Gladstone's life and good works contained in the following pages was, with the exception of the brief Epilogue with which it closes, first issued in the autumn of 1898; but in view of the recent death of that estimable lady it has been thought desirable to re-issue the work, in a cheaper form, in the interests of those who may desire to have a permanent memorial of one of the most noteworthy women of the Victorian Era.'

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—81 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print

IMPERIAL COMPETITION
IN
JACKSON'S DRAWING COPY BOOKS

This Competition is open to all pupils in public and private schools throughout the British Empire. There are eighteen superior prizes for both Junior and Senior pupils, and, in addition to nearly one hundred other prizes, Certificates of Merit will be awarded to those whose work deserves such recognition. Now that Drawing is a compulsory subject, the opportunity is afforded to pupils in Elementary Schools of winning valuable premiums with a minimum of labour, as there are only three pages of models to each book in the Series.

For Conditions and all Particulars of above Competition, apply to the Publishers.

PRESS OPINIONS.

'They cover a wide range—in marked contrast to the tame and ordinary drawing book. . . . Draughtsmen will welcome these bright and attractive copies.'—JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

'An excellent series worthy of high commendation.'—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

'A series of exceptional merit. . . . We know of no similar attempt to popularise high art.' SCHOOLMASTER.

'An excellent and highly practical series . . . very comprehensive.' SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

'Tastefully designed, chastely executed, in every respect excellent—eminently fitted to develop the artistic faculties.'—EDUCATIONAL NEWS.

'Serve admirably as a relief from Code grinding. . . . Splendid course of drawing.' TEACHERS' AID.

'Have seen nothing like them, can most confidently recommend them.' CIVIL SERVICE GAZETTE.

'Must be productive of the best possible results.'—NATIONAL TEACHER.

'The series for artistic excellence or for cheapness has no superior.'—CHILDREN'S MISTRESS.

'Should be seen by every Headmaster who makes drawing a subject in his school.' LITERARY WORLD.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

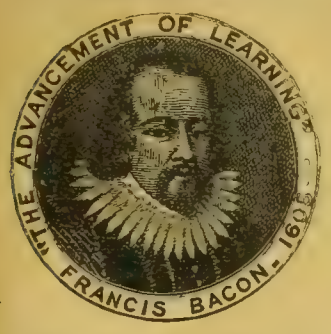
IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the



Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

LOW'S POPULAR TWO-SHILLING SERIES

These Books by Miss L. M. ALCOTT, Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, Mrs. A. WHITNEY, MAUD JEANNE FRANC, AMELIA E. BARR, and others, are well adapted for Girls for School Prizes, &c.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, price 2s.

Like the 'Standard Books for Boys,' for the earlier issues of this series there was a very large demand. Their reception has quite justified the high encomiums passed upon them by the Press generally. Altogether this series is one of the best possible selections from the various works of the distinguished Authors. It comprises books which the SATURDAY REVIEW describes as 'perhaps THE BEST OF THEIR KIND for the present generation.'

RECENT ADDITIONS TO THE SERIES.

45. COMIC TRAGEDIES, written by 'Jo' and 'Meg' (Miss L. M. ALCOTT).

The Scenery and Geology of the Peak of Derbyshire

By ELIZABETH DALE (Pfeiffer Student, Girton College).

This book contains an account of the geology of the Peak District of Derbyshire, treated with special reference to the question of scenery. In order that the work may be useful to those who have no previous knowledge of geology, the subject has been dealt with in a popular style. At the same time, the use of technical terms has not been avoided, but they have been introduced only as necessity arose, and have been explained by illustrations drawn from the locality. The book, therefore, serves as an introduction to the science of geology, as well as a geological companion to the local guide books.

A large coloured geological map, modified from that published by the Geological Survey, has been prepared by the author and included in the book.

There are also illustrations consisting of photographs of the district, drawings of fossils, geological sections and diagrams, many of which have been specially drawn by the author.

The Publishers' Circular

ST. DUNSTAN'S HOUSE, E.C.

September 21, 1900.

Are the people of to-day less disposed to read solid books than were their predecessors of a generation ago? If we accept the statements of certain critics who pretend to understand the public taste the answer must be in the affirmative: but if we take publishers' lists as a guide the reply will be an emphatic negative. During the last few years we have been assured from time to time that, notwithstanding the enormously increased work of the printing press, our valued friend the Man in the Street is daily caring less and less for solid—that is to say, instructive—reading. Many books are read in these days, but most of them, it is averred, are read for pleasure, not for profit. It may be doubted whether, except in the case of students preparing for examinations, books were ever read purely for profit, and even students do best when they take a pleasure in their studies.

But as regards what is vaguely termed the general public the censors would have us believe the taste in reading is almost wholly for the frivolous, the inane, and the sensational. If this view is correct, what becomes of the reprints of the English classics which figure so conspicuously in booksellers' windows? Being issued in such numbers presumably they are bought—for it has never, so far as we know, been said that publishers do not understand their business—and being bought, it is, we think, a fair inference that they are read. We are well aware, of course, that certain writers have become a fashion, that is to say, that their works are bought merely as a convention. It is, for example, supposed to be the correct thing to have a set of Shakespeare's works on one's shelves. The same remark applies to Scott, and is beginning to be applicable to Thackeray and Dickens. Poetry has always been regarded by the majority as an article to be purchased at long intervals and immediately locked away carefully in bookcases.

Yet it remains true that some of the best of the English classics are appreciated, at all events are read, by the general public. If, for instance, we take Messrs. Macmillan's 'Golden Treasury' series and Messrs. Dent's 'Temple Classics' series, we shall find an amazing record of sales. Indeed, the success of various 'libraries' of non-copyright books forces us to the conclusion, despite the assertions of critics, that there are still in these islands multitudes of people who have a sufficient love of good literature to buy and read it. The 'Golden Treasury' series, for instance, does not include the trashy, the sensational, or the frivolous, yet its success is known to every bookseller in the land. We are not of those who believe that, speaking generally, people buy books from a mere love of buying. The British public is not given to such methods of expenditure. It may indeed buy Shakespeare and Scott to fill vacant places on its shelves, but it will not buy Bacon and Browne and Lamb on the same principle. As these writers 'sell,' we must suppose they are read.

The cry of the pessimists is that the reading of to-day is confined either to scraps in weekly papers and in magazines or to trashy fiction—mostly to fiction. The list of new books given week by week in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR proves that the supply of fiction is extraordinarily great. Publishers being business men, we must assume that the demand, though not always entirely satisfactory, is also great. Are we hence to conclude that the intellect of England is declining? By no means. For as in the age of Shakespeare the literary genius of the country found expression through the drama, so in the age of Meredith it finds expression through the novel. The best work done to-day in literature is done in fiction. Were a competent critic to look back upon the books produced within the last ten years he would say that those which are likeliest to be known half a century hence are novels. It is invidious in such a case to mention names, but our readers may easily verify our statement for themselves. And on the broader question raised at the beginning of this article it may be said that while much that is frivolous, sensational, ill-written, and pernicious is read by the masses, these same masses read good books in surprising numbers. It is not the best books which 'boom,' but merit tells in literature—even in these days of inventive halfpenny newspapers.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

In the world of letters the most interesting event of the week has been the appearance of the Monthly Review. Seeing that the new periodical comes from the historic house of Murray, much was expected of it, and we may say at once that the highest expectations are more than fulfilled. Alike in matter and in appearance the Monthly Review is admirable. The cover is plain but striking, and the large clear print, substantial paper, and handsome page are such as will delight all who like a well-produced article. In a word, the 'get up' suggests precisely the excellence of the literary material which the editor, Mr. Newbolt, has managed to secure. Very rarely indeed is a first number so successful and satisfactory. The editorial articles occupy twenty-five pages, and, it need scarcely be said, deal with politics. The subjects are: Imperialism, China, and 'Parties and Principles.' These articles are, of course, unsigned. The first of the signed papers is an autobiographical sketch of uncommon interest by the Amir of Afghanistan, whose full autobiography Mr. Murray is to publish in the course of a few weeks.

The chapter now given describes the Amir's daily life. This is followed by an account of 'Surgical Experiences in South Africa,' from the pen of Mr. R. A. Bowlby, an article that is certain to attract attention in view of the present Hospitals Commission. Lieut. Carlyon Bellairs contributes a striking article on 'The Training of Naval Officers,' and Mr. Spencer Wilkinson, with considerably less freshness, sets forth some of the 'Puzzles of the War.' Among the miscellaneous papers are 'Art before Giotto,' illustrated; an appreciation of the late T. E. Brown, by Mr. A. T. Quiller-Couch; and an exceedingly suggestive essay on 'The Loss of Time,' by Miss M. E. Coleridge. Mr. Newbolt contributes an ode entitled 'The Nile,' and three chapters of the serial by Mr. Anthony Hope are given. It will thus be seen the editor contrives to provide plenty of variety. The quality must be tested by turning to the Review itself, which we commend without reservation to our readers. We cannot better express our opinion of the Monthly Review than by saying that it is in every way worthy of the distinguished publisher whose imprint it bears.

As announced some time ago in these columns, Mr. John Morley's biographical study of 'Oliver Cromwell' will be published next month by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The work, as readers of the Century are aware, is primarily a biography—that is, an interpretation of a temperament and a career. The biographer enters into motives and ideals alien from his own—though the attitude maintained is always rather that of a critic and never that of an enthusiast. The political, the social, and the religious atmospheres are all analysed, and whoever reads Mr. Morley will realise to some extent, for instance, the relation of Calvinism to the life of men of action. A notable feature of the book in the illustrated edition is the series of portraits, reproduced from carefully authenticated originals or prints, which makes the volume really a compendious portrait gallery of the England that Cromwell knew. The ordinary edition contains as frontispiece the well-known portrait from Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately an important work, 'The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain: the Man and the Statesman,' by H. Hurrell Harris. The book, which has been in preparation for some considerable time, gives an intimate account of Mr. Chamberlain's career, and includes a condensed history of much of the political life of the country during the last thirty years. Mr. Chamberlain has lately given a special sitting for the portrait which is to appear in the volume.

Mr. Frank T. Bullen's work on 'The Men of the Merchant Service' will be published on October 10 by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. The same firm will have ready next week the new edition of John Addington Symonds's work, 'Shakspere's Predecessors in the English Drama.'

'The Life of Professor Huxley,' by his son, Mr. Leonard Huxley, which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have in the press, is looked forward to with keen interest, for, as the biographer justly observes, Huxley was much more than a simple contributor, however illustrious, to natural science—much more even than a lucid and profound thinker. We learn that the book is not a summary of Huxley's contributions to science nor of his philosophic views, but rather a study of the man himself, of his character and temperament, and the circumstances under which his various works were begun and completed. So far as possible the story is told by original letters and by extracts from Huxley's correspondence, which was, however, by no means voluminous. The arrangement is simply chronological: seven chapters cover the first eight-and-twenty years; from that to the end a chapter is allotted, roughly speaking, to every year. The illustrations comprise eight portraits of varying dates.

A German translation of the inaugural address of the President, Mr. John Murray, delivered at the opening of the Third International Publishers' Congress held in London in June 1899, appears in a recent issue of the Börsenblatt. The editor prefaces Herr Arnold Huber's excellent rendering of Mr. Murray's address with the following words: 'The recently published annual report for 1899–1900 of the Swiss Booksellers' Union gives a very satisfactory translation of the opening speech of the President of the Publishers' Congress in London last year, from the pen of the Swiss delegate, Herr Arnold Huber, Frauenfeld. Although the publication of this speech comes rather late in the day, we believe, nevertheless, that the circulation of its thoughtful contents through the Börsenblatt will be even now welcome to many of our readers; and therefore, with kindly granted permission, we complete our numerous reports of last year by the supplementary publication of it in Arnold Huber's translation.'

On October 15 Messrs. George Newnes will have ready Part I. of 'The Life of a Century, 1800–1900,' edited by Edwin Hodder, with numerous illustrations, which is to be published in twelve monthly parts. The idea of the work is to give an account of the state of Europe generally, and of Great Britain and her dependencies particularly, at the beginning of the century, in relation to politics, religion, ethics, trade and commerce, art, science, literature, philanthropy, sports and pastimes, music and the drama, and to trace their developments throughout the past hundred years. These subjects will not be treated separately and exhaustively in distinct sections, but will be dealt with concurrently in chapters arranged into historical periods, as, for example, from 1801 to the Battle of Waterloo; from Waterloo to the Reform Bill, 1832; and so on.

Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons announce in their series of 'Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture,' edited by Dr. Williamson, the following new volumes: 'Perugino,' by the Editor; 'Sodoma,' by the Contessa Priuli-Bon; 'Memlinc,' by Mr. W. H. James Weale; 'Giorgione,' by Mr. Herbert Cook; and 'Della Robbia,' by the Marchesa Burlamacchi. They have also ready for immediate publication a volume on Botticelli, by Count Plunkett, an Irish scholar who has for many years devoted much industry and investigation to the subject. The volume will be illustrated with twenty photogravure plates and numerous other reproductions, giving practically the whole of the artist's known works.

Mr. Alexis Krausse's new work, 'The Story of the Chinese Crisis,' mentioned in these columns some time ago, will be published next week by Messrs. Cassell & Co. It presents a plain narrative of the relations between China and Great Britain, Russia, France, and Germany, with such detail respecting the Chinese themselves as is necessary to present a coherent picture of the country and its inhabitants. The incidents preceding the Boxer rising are given in considerable detail.

'Eighteenth Century Colour Prints' is the title of a folio which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are publishing. Its subject, 'An Essay on certain Stipple Engravers and their Work in Colour,' suggests the scope of the work which has been compiled, arranged, and written by Mrs. Julia Frankau. There are fifty-two illustrations selected so as to show the work of as many different engravers as possible, and in every instance so far as might be to keep in view the influence of the colour-printer in the effect produced. Two editions of the folio are issued. The first, issued at eight guineas, contains a frontispiece in colour, the remaining plates in bistre; the second, in which all the plates are reproduced in colour, is issued at eighteen guineas. This is not a book for the reader of cheap literature.

Mr. Walter Scott will shortly publish a work on 'The Mediterranean Race,' by Professor Sergi. In this book—which is almost entirely new, and has been specially prepared by the author for the 'Contemporary Science' series—Professor Sergi has presented the first full statement of the facts and views that, first brought forward by himself some five years ago, have done so much to revolutionise the Aryan question. The evidence tends to show that the race inhabiting

Southern Europe and Northern Africa formerly occupied, and to some extent still occupies, the greater part of Central and Northern Europe, including the British Isles, and has played the chief part in European civilisation.

Mr. Karslake has gained the Silver Medal at the Paris Exhibition for the bindings from the Hampstead Bindery and the Guild of Women Binders. What is perhaps remarkable in the circumstances is that Mr. Karslake is not a binder by training, and two years ago knew absolutely nothing of the practical part of the work. It is only eighteen months since he took over the sole direction of the Hampstead Bindery himself, and the exhibits for Paris were prepared under his superintendence. He may be congratulated upon the work having so amply justified the opinion expressed in the article which appeared in our issue of February 25, 1899. It may be added that the members of the Hampstead Bindery probably execute their work under more favourable conditions than ordinarily obtain, in that the building was originally a large studio, built by an artist in the middle of an old garden attached to Mr. Karslake's house, and that the bindery is open to inspection any day.

Ogilvie-Grant, of the British Museum, and Dr. Henry O. Forbes, Director of Museums to the Corporation of Liverpool. It will be illustrated with about thirty coloured plates, and numerous engravings throughout the text, illustrating the scenery, natives, ethnology, geology, flora and fauna, &c., of the islands.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are publishing in their series of 'English Theological Classics' an edition of the works of Bishop Butler in two volumes, containing respectively the 'Sermons' and the 'Analogy of Religion.' The editor is Dr. Bernard, of Trinity College, Dublin. Notes are supplied, mainly to elucidate Butler's meaning and to direct attention to the controversies with which he was concerned. A few points are indicated at which the Bishop's arguments appear no longer convincing, but the object of the editor has been throughout to interpret, not to criticise.

The 'Illustrated Guide to the Church Congress and Exhibition,' which opens at Newcastle-upon-Tyne to-day (Saturday), is published this week. There are over 100 illustrations, a good up-to-date map of Newcastle, showing all the Congress buildings, and a reproduction of Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1736. It contains some useful notes on the ecclesiology and archæology of the city and diocese of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and of the diocese of Durham, while every detail is given as to the Congress meetings and speakers, the services of all the Newcastle churches, and the latest arrangements as to the speakers of the extra meetings held during the Congress week. It is published at Maltravers House, Arundel Street, Strand.

TRADE CHANGES.

In view of their increasing business, Messrs. John Menzies & Co., of Edinburgh, have removed to larger and more commodious premises in Rose Street, where they have almost double the accommodation they possessed in their old warehouse. The new building consists of five floors, and is lit throughout with electric light. One of the features of the place is a room devoted to sample copies of all the new publications. Messrs. Menzies & Co. have issued invitations to the trade to visit this sample room.

Mr. Alexander Murray, the well-known bookseller of Aberdeen, has acquired new premises at 261 Union Street, only a few yards from the shop he has occupied during the past twenty-one years. This step has been rendered necessary in consequence of the growing demands of Mr. Murray's business.

HOW BOOKSELLERS MAY MAKE SALES.

We have many times in these columns insisted on the importance of intelligence, knowledge, and energy on the part of booksellers. If it be true that Heaven helps them who help themselves, then the bookseller is still to a large extent master of his fate. It is certain he can do much to promote sales, and we cannot help feeling that English booksellers do not always realise their own power and grasp their opportunities. The man of energy and intelligence will succeed in any calling, and we are convinced the book trade still offers possibilities if not of making a fortune, at least of making a competency. Our contemporary the New York Publishers' Weekly is evidently of the same mind as regards the trade on the other side of the Atlantic. 'What,' it asks in a recent issue, 'makes a book sell? Conscientious workmanship on the part of the author? Public interest in the subject? Favourable, or unfavourable, reviews in the newspapers? Startling and lavish advertising? Attractive get-up? The name of the author, or of the publisher? Endless-chain recommendation by readers? Discussion of its merits at literary circles, or at clubs? All of these no doubt are helps in selling some books, and in the greatest number of cases the last three are among the most important factors. But there is one more factor of great influence, and that factor, though often overlooked, is the intelligent man behind the counter. His influence is as great in large cities as in the smaller towns, where, if he is alive to his opportunities, the bookseller may become a dominant power.

'There has been not a little lamentation of late years among book-buyers that the bookseller has no longer the literary intelligence that used in olden times to be a characteristic of the followers of his profession. Possibly this is in some measure true: with the reduction of the profits in the business, that scramble to make a bare living, which has necessitated the introduction into bookstores of all sorts of knick-knacks, has diverted to a certain extent from the proper study of their calling many intelligent booksellers, who would gladly devote more time to the study of the books which they handle.

'This should not altogether relieve the bookseller from blame, because even under these circumstances he has need to be as well versed as possible in all information which the book-buyer may desire. As a matter of fact, this is the very means for him to hold his trade against the competition of the undersellers whose "helps" know nothing about their goods except that "a book 's a book." Even in large cities, centres of literary life, there are many persons who are contented to read what their favourite bookseller recommends; who would scarcely feel honest in saving a dime at the underseller's shop, or a quarter by writing to the publishers, at nearly a quarter's worth of trouble, if the bookseller has previously put them under obligations by his readiness and courtesy in furnishing information they have desired. In fact, it is not only to actual purchasers of a book that the bookseller should be glad to furnish information; he should be eager to welcome new faces and to give them all the information possible, even at no immediate pecuniary return. Let a bookseller once earn a reputation for courtesy and an all-round knowledge of his profession, and there will be very little question, at least so far as his locality is concerned, as to what makes a book sell!' These are views which have been expressed again and again in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, and we are glad to find them repeated in influential quarters. At present there is special need that booksellers and their assistants should be alert and active. In another column we publish a letter pleading for better pay for assistants. That plea we support on the ground that adequate remuneration means efficiency and inadequate remuneration inefficiency. But it must be added that booksellers' assistants might in a great many cases do more for themselves and for their employers than they do. They might, for example, know more about the books they sell, and be able to answer questions put by intending buyers, not from hearsay but from personal knowledge. We have known many instances in which sales have been missed through the indifference or ignorance of assistants. With the young bookseller lies the future, and if he is careless and apathetic as an assistant he is not likely to succeed when he gets a business of his own.

ASSOCIATED BOOKSELLERS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

NORTHERN BRANCH.

The Annual Meeting of the Northern Branch of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland was held in the ancient city of York, on Wednesday, September 12. The business meeting was held at 11 A.M. in the Merchants' Hall, Fossgate, and in the temporary absence of the President (Mr. R. Jackson, Leeds, who arrived by a later train) the chair was occupied by Mr. J. B. Sampson, of York. The Agenda contained many items of business, which were fully discussed by the members present. The balance-sheet was presented, showing a balance in hand of £2. 6*s*. 1*d*. The officers for the ensuing year were also elected: Mr. J. B. Sampson, York, Chairman; Mr. R. S. Chrystal, Manchester, Treasurer; Mr. E. W. Coates, Huddersfield, Secretary. Hearty votes of thanks were accorded to the retiring chairman, Mr. R. Jackson, and secretary, Mr. J. Brierley, whose term of office had expired in accordance with the rules.

Luncheon was subsequently served at one of the city restaurants, and after a short time spent in visiting the principal sights of the city the whole party met at the river side, where a steamer had been specially chartered and was in readiness to convey the company down the river to Naburn Lock, a charming waterway past the palace of the Archbishop, greatly enhanced by the beautiful summerlike weather prevailing.

The return to York was made at 6 o'clock, amid the regrets of all present that such a pleasant day had passed all too quickly; and on all hands it was hoped that a picnic would in future form a part of the Annual Meeting.

IN MEMORIAM.

On August 31 Mr. George Dawson Hawkins died at his residence, 22 Ambler Road, Finsbury Park, aged 75. The deceased was born at Bath, and, after being for three years with a Bristol bookseller, entered the house of Messrs. Longmans & Co. in November 1848. After some years' employment in the Country Department, he became cashier in 1865, and only retired from that position on July 31 of the present year; his total period of service at 39 Paternoster Row being fifty-two years.

THE NOVEL—AGAIN.

The article on current fiction which appeared in a recent number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has given many learned critics a text for pretty little sermons. The Daily News discussed the matter in a weighty leader, and numerous articles on the subject of the current novel have been printed in other papers. According to our contemporary, no book 'that is a book' and not a literary miracle really finds favour if it does not offer itself in the guise of a novel. 'It need not,' it is added, 'be a novel; it may be a Treatise on Pauperism, on Popery, on Army Reform, on Prison Reform, on the Immortality of the Soul, or the Theory of Population; but the book that succeeds must appear in the garb of romance. The critic in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR (and surely he ought to know),' remarks the Daily News, 'says that in successful summer books "everything — character portraiture, literary style, probability —is given up to the demand for exciting incident." This,' considers our friendly critic, 'is too rigidly stated. Whosoever,' he goes on, 'picks up the most popular romances of the day, and opens them at hazard, will light, at every dip, on such phrases as "The Church," "The Method of Christianity," "Heaven, Earth, and the Soul," "The True Modernity in Woman," "Occidental Religion," and so forth. Speculations on Ether and Atoms abound, the romancers being persuaded that you can see an atom under a microscope. Such speculations appear to be as popular as was the doctrine of vortices in the days of the "Précieuses Ridicules," when, to be sure, nobody introduced vortices into novels. The esteemed author who can pose as a kind of female Mahdi is certain of a hearing. But it is not everyone who can do the trick, or sit successfully on the Sybil's tripod. Success in this field can come to no man or woman who has a sense of humour and is not a sciolist. Modern prophets must begin with owning an exorbitant, overweening belief in themselves, which, by sheer dint of suggestion, awakes an answering belief in the reader. "There ought to be, and I believe there is, a short and simple answer to modern scepticism," says a lady of quality in a novel by Mr. Norris. To find that way, and to work it up with a mass of fustian into a novel, is one road to success. But few can walk therein.

'Thus religion plus sensation is an excellent recipe. The novel-reader of to-day is an earnest person, but not earnest enough to read learned treatises on the immense topics, religious or social, with which he is concerned. Such works spell failure—the lesson is wanted, but it must be offered in the guise of romance. The Gospels must be interwoven with several love affairs, and a murder or two. Mingled with these even a discussion of the Spencerian philosophy will go down. There is nothing new in this medley.'

'Nothing,' it is added, 'is much less read than real history; while, especially in America, few novels are more popular than historical novels. Several of these, which do not commend themselves much to lovers of "Esmond" or of actual history, possess an almost fabulous circulation. They are all very like each other: all have a stereotyped air, and criticism cannot discover why one takes the public by the ear and ninety-nine are never heard of except by reviewers.

'What is the "differentia" (it is asked) which causes the popularity of an historical novel that is just exactly like a score of other novels that fail? There must be a reason somewhere, apart from more or less copious advertisement. But the perplexed critic has to fall back on chance, in the Darwinian sense of that word. Still, the great public does like some history in the garb of romance, just as it likes some religion, some science, some politics. In short, the novel-reading quarter of a million has intellectual tastes and impulses, and does not, we venture to think, always like crude "sensationalism" alone. "Mysterious murders, unscrupulous adventurers, fascinating, but treacherous women," these have their vogue, and why not? Few things or people are more naturally interesting to mankind. They do not come into the lives of most persons; we do not meet a Mary Stuart, a Sidonia the Sorceress, a deathless St. Germain. We only find such human "sports" in books, usually not very well written, but we cannot have everything at once. We can do without "style" very well, if the author has the solitary essential, the knack of narrative. It is not the drawing of character, or elegance of the diction, or scholarly knowledge of an historical period, that takes the public by the ears. It is nothing but the instinct, quite indefinable, for telling a story. We may see all the defects in grammar, all the stereotyped phrases, all the ignorances of the author, we may sneer or sigh, but (unless we are very cultivated indeed) we go on reading. At the end we are not critical, but grateful. We ask for more. We have been amused.' After all, Sir Walter Scott was right then. The business of a novelist is to please, to amuse a vacant hour. Yet it has to be stated that some novelists who bore are yet immensely successful—from the financial point of view. The reason for this seems to be that the public still appears to have some idea it ought to read for edification, and so takes to tracts in the guise of novels.

THE AUTHOR OF 'JOHN INGLESANT.'

Like many others who have made their names famous in the annals of literature, Mr. Shorthouse has never been else than a literary amateur—using the word, of course, in its original meaning—for after leaving school he entered the chemical business of his father, and has been actively engaged in business pursuits ever since. But his hobby was literature, and all his leisure he devoted to the study of books and the practice of writing, evidently without any ambition in the direction of publication. . . .

No one who has read 'John Inglesant' need be told that the work is the result of years of patient writing and rewriting, to say nothing of the erudition which every chapter of it discloses. Mr. Shorthouse was thirty-one years of age before he started to pen his famous book, and many years before that the germ of it had been present in his mind, as his friends of the essay club could tell from the tone of his contributions to their weekly symposia. Occupied with his business each day, it was only the evenings and other leisure moments that could be devoted to the writing of the romance; so progress for a time was slow, and for two or three years the work was laid aside, abandoned almost, but eventually to be taken up again and carried through doggedly to the end. It is in this way, however, that most of our great works have been produced. Never for a moment did the shadow of the printer waiting for 'copy' fall across Mr. Shorthouse's page. The thought of publication was the last thing in his mind. He wrote only 'when the spirit moved him' (to quote a phrase peculiar to the sect with which he was associated in his early years), and the work was eventually finished some years before its author seriously considered the question of publication. Indeed, it is doubtful whether contemporary literature would ever have been enriched with any contribution of his but for the solicitations of friends who had been privileged to read 'John Inglesant' in manuscript, and who at last succeeded in inducing Mr. Shorthouse to have it printed for private circulation.

There was never a book which started with greater drawbacks to popularity than this privately printed edition of 'John Inglesant,' which consisted of one hundred copies printed by Rickman King, of Great Queen Street, Birmingham (a street since enclosed by New Street Station). Of these, Mr. Shorthouse distributed seventy-five among his friends, and the remaining twenty-five were published in July 1880 by Cornish Brothers, the well-known Birmingham booksellers, at one guinea each. Yet not even this limited issue could prevent the sterling merits of the book from making its way, and its immediate history from this point is eloquent of the advantage of getting a work into type, even though the edition be a small one. It so happened that a friend of the author living at Oxford was among the seventy-five favoured with a copy, and this, after reading, he sent to Mrs. Humphry Ward, who as a keen judge of literature could not fail to be impressed with the marvellous power of the book; and she soon afterwards spoke of it to Mr. Macmillan, who in turn immediately recognised in it the highest literary qualities, and set about to obtain the author's consent to its publication.

SALARIES OF BOOKSELLERS' ASSISTANTS.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—In noticing an article in the Contemporary Review for August you call attention (by your leader of August 18) to a subject which struck home to many of your subscribers, perhaps more than you anticipated; and as the introduction of the net system together with the splendid attitude of the publishers towards their friends the booksellers act together largely as incentives to success in the new scheme of reform, we take this seasonable opportunity of raising the same question in a nearer connection.

We believe a change for the better is at hand, and therefore have courage given us in opening this question, inasmuch as we can already feel the glow of the freshly stimulated blood.

This question is also—may I say?—an element of danger. Our point is that the pay for capable men in the bookselling trade is exceedingly low, so low indeed as not to bear favourable comparison even with that for unskilled labour.

We cannot overlook this grave fact, grave because we can confidently affirm that many even of the best of booksellers' assistants find it worth their while when it comes to settling down in life (or before) to turn their minds to fresh fields of employment, where the remuneration is according to a standard of efficiency, or where they are paid enough to enable them to maintain a position they are considered through the rank of their trade to hold.

We remember of course in the past, in many cases, it has resulted solely from the bad state of this trade. Yet we feel sure masters would wish to share the pecuniary benefits of the coming reform equally with their assistants who have also been partakers with them in the distress; and will it not be that the more immediate the beneficial results of the reform are felt by all, the greater will be that reform, and the impetus to success more powerful?

There are men now who are seriously considering whether it is worth their while any longer to hold their positions, and stand by a trade which has already had some of their best years—years of patient labour and earnest endeavour, but which for them has such uncertain promises of future reward. These men act not thus selfishly; they are men of constant hope, and having tasted the pleasures as well as the drudgery of their trade, still hope. They are, however, in most cases well educated, certainly well enough to enable them to enter trades or professions in which, with the same or even less ability, higher salaries can be commanded.

We must also remember the long hours of the bookseller's assistant, the untiring punctiliousness requisite, as also a head capable of storing encyclopædic knowledge, minds keen and sympathetic; intelligent and thorough the assistant is expected to be, and on behalf of those who are and those who would be so, we ask that they may know their reward is at hand, that by increased energy of purpose they may help to raise the trade from its present—yet we trust but passing—sorry condition.

'There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune.'

Yours,

Alpe.

NATIONAL HOME-READING UNION.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed to remind your readers that the Syllabus of Subjects for the Twelfth Reading Session of the National Home-Reading Union is ready?

For the information of those who are not acquainted with the Union, I should like to state that its aim is, briefly, to render reading attractive and profitable by issuing lists drawn up by authorities of the best books in various subjects, and by publishing magazines which contain introductions to the subjects under study, suggestions as to the best methods of reading the prescribed books, answers to questions, and criticism of essays, as well as news of other readers' doings.

The subjects included in the Young People's Course are:

1. History and Biography, with special reference to King Alfred and his times.
2. Literature. (Shakespeare, Prose, and Poetry.)
3. Travel.
4. Romance and Humour. And
5. Nature Study. (For this, special editions of Richard Jefferies's 'The Open Air and Nature near London' have been obtained.

For the General Course—a section intended for those who have but little leisure—the subjects are:

1. Social Science.
2. The Reformation and the Revival of Learning. (For this group special editions of the following have been obtained: Koestlin's 'Luther,' Froude's 'Erasmus,' Hudson Shaw's 'Lectures on the Oxford Reformers,' and Mrs. Charles's 'Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family.'
3. Geology.
4. Italy in the Revival of Learning.
5. Rome.
6. Travel.
7. Biography.
8. Novels, Essays, and Poetry. And
9. A group of books specially chosen for Sunday School Teachers.

The Special Course section is intended for more advanced students, who desire to receive systematic tutorial help, and includes the following subjects:

1. English History, from 1789.
2. Modern English Literature.
3. The Tragedies of Shakespeare.
4. Browning.
5. Mediæval and Early Renaissance Literature.
6. India.
7. French History, 1375–1789.
8. German Lyrical Poetry.

READING FROM THE LIBRARIAN'S POINT OF VIEW.

A librarian (name not stated) has given a representative of the Daily Chronicle his ideas about the books which are read in the 'silly season.' This gentleman believes that throughout the summer the reading public subsist on crumbs. 'If you were engaged in the book trade,' he remarked to the interviewer, 'you would have a clearing up of stock, say, once a year. When? Why, towards the silly season you would get rid of all the trivial, worthless, cumbering stuff in your place. These odd volumes eventually form the main pabulum of the silly-season reader—soiled volumes, out-of-date volumes, what you will, only they must be bought dirt cheap. Their buyers, as they get scattered over the country in loads, will be the silly-season reader. He simply wants a book, something in binding—it doesn't matter in the least what—and here it is for a few coppers, or the cream of the supply for a few shillings.' He is further of opinion that the silly season is a sort of 'scavenger' that gets rid of trash which would otherwise be troublesome or pernicious. As for the general reading, he adds, it is fiction, fiction, and nothing but fiction. An American brother, it is scarcely surprising to find, takes the same view; and, being much more serious than the Englishman, he deplores the lack of taste for edifying literature. Taking a mass of statistics prepared by librarians all over the United States, he remarks that in a final list compiled of all the important things that are going on in the world to-day only one is represented on the list, the South African War. The Philippines are forgotten, so is the Spanish War, and China had not come upon the scene on the first day of July. The reason for the apparent lack of interest in the Philippines and other like important subjects is, perhaps, that there is no book on any one of them that compares in interest with Bryce's 'South Africa,' or even Hillegas's 'Oom Paul's People.' A strong drift toward interest in nature is indicated by the popularity of 'Elizabeth and her German Garden,' Van Dyke's 'Fisherman's Luck,' and Thompson's 'Wild Animals.' The very great popularity of the last book is perhaps due to the fact that it appeals to adult and juvenile readers alike.

'From lists like this,' he says correctly, 'no definite conclusions can be drawn as to the reading of people of average intelligence throughout the United States, unless it is the following—that the people are inclined to read, at least outside of fiction, a fairly wholesome class of literature; that they like to be entertained and informed, but that they evade with considerable care anything that would tend to lead them to think.

'The whole field of sociology is touched only by Flynt and Wyckoff, and their books are both read rather from reasons of curiosity than from a desire to be seriously informed on social problems. There is no religion here. The nearest approach to it is in the books of Hudson and Savage. Both deal in a measure with Spiritualism and the life beyond the grave, and, unfortunately, neither of them has any scientific value. The absence of Flammarion's "Unknown" from the list makes a popular vote for Hudson and Savage rather puzzling, unless Flammarion's name served to repel people who are afraid of something scientific, and who did not trouble themselves to ascertain that it is no more scientific than the others.

'Four of the books seem to be chiefly gossip. Nine are distinctly what one might call popular. In fact, the whole list is that, with the exception perhaps of Stevenson and Browning and the interest in them is a rather morbid and unhealthy desire on the part of people to know about the intimate life of a man of repute: the same kind of an unfortunate desire that brings about the success of the scandal chronicles in the yellow journals. "The Martyrdom of an Empress" is somewhat unique in that it portrays the private life of a woman of high rank, something that has not been brought before the public very recently. It is just possible that a good many readers have swallowed this under the impression that it was a sugar-coated pill containing history.

'Of what the teachers of literature call the great classics there is not one. Of the popular novels one is almost poor, and the others are very light. It is worth while to call attention again to the fact that four of the fifteen books are on the South African War; that two of these four, and they the most popular, are pro-Boer, and that of the other two, one is on both sides, leaving only one pro-British book.' After all this wailing, it would be interesting to discover how much these critical librarians do to raise the public taste in regard to books.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'The Uttermost Farthing,' by B. Paul Neuman. The story of the deep-rooted dislike of a resolute young girl for her father's early chum, who she thinks has been the cause of his ruination, is agreeably told by Mr. Neuman in his novel. The plot is not particularly original, nor has it been treated with any exceptional freshness, but 'twill serve; of some humanities the reading public never grows tired. Of course it is apparent from the first that the family feud will be terminated by the intermarriage of some of the children; and so it turns out, even the implacable Nora eventually succumbing to the attractions of the enemy's son, while her brother Ted marries one of the daughters. We are inclined to think Mr. Neuman falls off a little in his narration of the later incidents of the story, and that the work generally fails to realise the anticipations raised by the opening chapters; but it is a good average novel all the same, and will well repay perusal.

From Messrs. S. H. Bousfield & Co.—'A Princess of Vascovy,' by John Oxenham. The incidents of this romance are of a somewhat detached character, and might perhaps be improved by being more closely drawn together, but they undoubtedly possess interest. Charles Roustaine, a near relation of the reigning family of Vascovy, has all the explorer's love of excitement and the traveller's desire for constant change. This is completely shared by his daughter, whom he takes with him on his adventurous travels in South America. Here he meets with his death, but is able to leave her in charge of a nephew whom they strangely meet with. She eventually marries her cousin, and accompanies him in further explorations. They sail amongst the South Sea Islands, and have numerous remarkable adventures, meeting many people, who, somewhat to the detriment of the story, are afterwards lost sight of. Then the heroine's husband is drowned, and she is left with a bright, sturdy little boy. Wherever she goes her remarkable beauty and attractive personality gain her admirers. The scene is subsequently shifted to Vascovy, where the interest is concentrated in court intrigues. The little boy Karl ultimately becomes heir to the throne, and amid a general appearance of glorious rejoicing and to the sound of marriage bells the story comes to a conclusion. The only people who are apparently unable to interest themselves in the festivities are the unsuccessful suitors of the heroine; and very naturally they look upon her second marriage with anything but feelings of tranquillity.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates.—'The Life of Saint Gerlach,' by Frederick A. Houck. Much reverential care has evidently been devoted to this work, and a 'life' of much interest is the result. It is related with a simplicity admirably in keeping with the subject. The volume is divided into four parts, respectively treating of Gerlach as a Knight of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation, as a Penitent in the Holy Land, as a Knight of Christ, and as a Saint.

From Mr. W. B. Clive.—'The Tutorial History of English Literature,' by A. J. Wyatt. This little work, which seeks in small space to give the history as distinguished from the mere story of English literature—'to lay bare some of the more important aspects of the work of each author selected, while tracing the lines of development from writer to writer'—is divided into nine chapters. In these the author respectively treats of English literature before the Conquest (1066 A.D.), from the Conquest to Chaucer (1066-1400 A.D.), from Mediæval to Modern (1400-1579 A.D.), the English Drama from Spencer to Milton (1579-1600 A.D.), and during the Age of Dryden (1600-1700 A.D.), the Age of Pope (1700-1740 A.D.), the Age of Johnson (1740-1798 A.D.), and the Age of Wordsworth (1798-1832 A.D.). The book is put together with that keen eye to the practical necessities of the student which distinguishes all the works issued by the University Tutorial Press, and is calculated to be of the greatest service to both teacher and pupil alike.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Shadow of Quong Lung,' by C. W. Doyle. The detestable crimes of the resolute Chinaman whose villainies form the connecting link of the stories grouped under the above heading are powerfully calculated to arouse the reader's interest; and in the hope that Quong Lung eventually meets with his just deserts he will probably eagerly peruse the book to the end. We notice that the author speaks of the kidnapping of slave girls in Chinatown (with which his volume has so largely to do) as by no means of unfrequent occurrence, and matters generally seem to be in sad need of investigation. Dr. Doyle's work is certainly not any the less attractive by reason of the measure of truth underlying the stories.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Bride of Llangasty,' by J. E. Patterson. In the character of its general incidents this story can scarcely be called enlivening. The hero, Alec Saunders, finding himself deceived by the girl he is engaged to, who is conspiring with the friend to whom he has acted as a good Samaritan, leaves England and for a time moodily wanders about the Continent. Eventually he returns to this country, and takes up his abode in Wales. Here he meets and falls in love with another girl—only to find that she is already married. The husband, strangely enough, turns out to be the very man who deprived him of his first sweetheart. He is a rough, treacherous fellow, and bitterly resents Saunders' intimacy with his wife when he comes to know of it. The couple after a time separate, and Dian (the wife) goes to live with her relatives in a small cottage, where she is visited by Saunders. One day the drunken husband finds her out again, and, after a scene of great brutality, he ends by knocking her down the stairs. She survives only a few hours, being greatly injured. At a later period Saunders and the husband again meet, a terrific fight takes place, with the result that the latter is stabbed to the heart. Afterwards the hero assumes the appearance of 'a man with a sad, dark eye, a sorrowful yet calm and pathetic face, and curiously bushy hair grown grey before its time;' and as such we not altogether unwillingly part company with him. It should be said that he writes books, which is probably an additional reason for the solemn gravity of his countenance.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'Days in Galilee and Scenes in Judæa: together with some Account of a Solitary Cycling Journey in Southern Palestine,' by the Rev. Alexander A. Boddy, F.R.G.S. After the fashion of the great majority of travellers, Mr. Boddy has not given us a carefully planned, closely connected account of his visit to the Holy Land so much as a series of detached impressions, many of which have probably been committed at the time to a note-book. This lends an appearance of 'scrappiness' to his work, and is no doubt responsible for the introduction of a considerable amount of trivial matter. However, the book is undoubtedly interesting, and the large number of illustrations that brighten its pages add additional attraction to the letterpress. Perhaps the most novel portion of it is that which describes Mr. Boddy's cycling tour in Syria. He rode across Sharon to Jerusalem, and visited several places of interest in the Holy Land. The volume concludes with a sermon preached by the author in Bishop Blyth's chapel at Jerusalem. We should add that the book is very well printed and produced.

From Messrs. Gibbings & Co.—'A Short History of China: an Account for the General Reader of an Ancient Empire and People,' by Demetrius Charles Boulger. The present time is certainly opportune for a new edition of this work. It contains an additional chapter continuing the history from 1890 to the present date by a writer whose name is not stated. Few works will supply the reader with a more interesting account of the events that have placed the Celestial Empire in the position it now occupies, or will furnish him with a better idea of the important influence exercised by the Eastern nation. The volume is a reprint of the book as issued by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co. in 1893.

From Mr. L. Upcott Gill.—'Old English Churches: their Architecture, Furniture, Decoration, and Monuments,' by George Clinch, F.G.S. The articles in this volume have been reprinted from the Bazaar, and it is understood that their success in that periodical has justified this course. They are pleasantly written, and will afford interesting information to the large number of people with whom the inspection of churches forms a constant attraction in life, while great care has evidently been taken to render the volume as accurate as possible. The illustrations in a work of this kind are naturally of the greatest importance, and this department in the present instance has been excellently looked after. There are upwards of 130 illustrations, full page and in the text, and all are of a high degree of merit. The volume should have attractions for a wide circle of readers.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'Early Days of my Youth,' by the Author of 'I Think when I Read that Sweet Story of Old.' This is the simple account of a life which had been largely devoted to the cause of missionary work in India. It carries us back to the early years of the nineteenth century, when education for the labouring classes was in its infancy, gas was unknown, and the family fires were lighted in the morning with a spark struck from steel on tinder. In the family of the authoress the bill of the local surgeon and apothecary for red draughts three times a day, pills, calomel doses, black draughts, jalap powders, leeches, blisters, plaisters, &c., amounted to as much as £70 per annum. Certainly we have in some things indeed made progress. Mrs. Luke tells of her early childhood, home life, journeys with her parents, struggles for education, and so forth; and the many admirers of the touching hymn she composed, the first line of which is quoted above, will be glad, we are sure, to have this interesting record of a life unobtrusively given up to high and unselfish purposes.

From Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.—'Liberalism and the Empire.' This volume consists of three essays by Francis W. Hirst, Gilbert Murray, and J. L. Hammond respectively. The first, under the title of 'Imperialism and Finance,' shows how militarism and excessive expenditure upon armaments both feed and are fed by calculated panics and 'inevitable wars,' which also retard the progress of reforms at home; the second treats of 'The Exploitation of Inferior Races in Ancient and Modern Times,' and is an analysis in part of the relation of Great Britain to her subject races; while in the third, which deals with 'Colonial and Foreign Policy,' a contrast is drawn 'between the leading ideas of Liberalism in foreign policy, and the teaching of modern imperialism.' All three essays are thoughtful, closely reasoned contributions on the subject of the present-day tendency towards imperialism, and the authors have evidently the truth of their convictions very thoroughly at heart. Possibly it is for the reason that they are so deadly in earnest that occasional shortcomings in the matter of argument appear. Political bias is certainly not absent from their work, interesting though it undoubtedly proves.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Senator North,' by Gertrude Atherton. The deep-seated passion of a young, charming, highly intellectual woman for a man more than double her age, who has already a wife living, may possess some interest for readers as showing the intricate workings of the human heart, but it can scarcely be termed a profitable form of study. Senator North, a Washington politician, is a man of very attractive personality, by no means handsome in his appearance, though possessing great will power; but apparently it never occurs to him that in continuing a close intimacy with a woman who has frankly confessed her great love for him he is playing a thoroughly ignoble part, while Betty Madison on her side hardly gives a thought to the unfortunate wife whom she is injuring as much as one woman can injure another. In a sense, the story is an apology for ill-regulated passion. Perhaps the individual who is worst treated is Senator Burleigh, to whom Betty engages herself in a moment of despair at the hopelessness of her affection for North, afterwards throwing him over when she discovers that Mrs. North is dead. So at the end of the story happiness is in store for the two leading characters—at least such happiness as can come from the union of a man more than sixty years of age with a woman under thirty. The book is by no means wanting in merit, being brightly and cleverly written; but the attitude taken is completely feminine, and it is not everyone who will be able to treat so lightly the conduct of Senator North as the authoress does.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Topics on Greek and Roman History,' by Arthur L. Goodrich. This little work, intended for use in secondary schools, presents an excellent scheme for the study of Greek history by the topical method. The author is an American, and his volume illustrates well the tendency in the States to reduce everything to a system of what may be termed time-saving clockwork. But in this instance, as in so many others, the system has a recognised advantage, and the book suggests many suitable methods of educational treatment. It is worthy of close attention by all who are interested in scholastic work.

From the same.—'Curiosities of Natural History,' by Francis T. Buckland, M.A., First, Second, Third and Fourth Series. How like a familiar friend these four volumes come to us, and how heartily we welcome their reappearance in a new and popular edition! Few men have ever possessed the power of the author for displaying the facts of natural history in so interesting a form, though possibly other authors have been more stylish and profound. Somehow there was something about Frank Buckland that endeared his readers to him. Probably it was the thorough genuineness of the man. Anyhow, his books have run through a large number of editions, and are certainly not likely to lose anything by the latest, which is extremely well printed and neatly bound. To those of the present generation who are not acquainted with Frank Buckland, we would earnestly recommend this means of introduction.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Path and Goal,' by Ada Cambridge. The hero of this novel is a good-looking young doctor who, when he embarks on private practice as assistant to a general practitioner in a cathedral town not far removed from Cambridge, seems to be somewhat susceptible to the charms of the opposite sex, and before long has succumbed to the fascinations of more than one fair resident. However, he is a fine manly young fellow, and for this thoroughly human attribute we are sure readers, particularly of the feminine persuasion, are not likely to condemn him. His life in Wakeminster is by no means unenjoyable. The old doctor to whom he acts as assistant, though reported to be obstinate and short-tempered, proves scarcely so bad as depicted, and, taking a strong liking to Black, eventually bequeaths him the practice and all the money he possesses. Unfortunately there is a legacy of another description that entails responsibilities of no ordinary kind. These, however, are happily surmounted. If there is any deduction to be derived from the story it is this: That a young man should not be careless in the bestowal of his affections—that he should make a definite choice, and prosecute his courtship with decision and vigour. Adrian Black has many love affairs in the course of the narrative, eventually as a middle-aged bachelor marries an unsuitable woman, and after her death again meets the old sweetheart whom he should rightly have married, now a widow with grown-up sons. They are both elderly people, but there seems some chance of their ending their days together in comparative happiness when an unexpected catastrophe takes place, and with this the story ends. Though pleasantly and brightly written, it produces in its general influence rather a sombre effect, since it is not pleasant to see at least two good lives hopelessly sacrificed.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'My Afterdream: a Sequel to the late Mr. Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward,"' by Julian West. Life has always been a struggle between the intellectual activities of the old and young, the elderly viewing the efforts of their more youthful compeers to put the world straight with complaisant indulgence. The world revolves in a circle, there is nothing new, the philosophers tell us. Certainly no improvement is to be manifested, according to the author of this volume, a hundred years hence. Socialism, or rather the co-operative system, is to be very prevalent in the land, but its attendant inconveniences are great. In consequence of the tube system of supply to the head centre, the streets are rendered almost impassable, and pedestrians have to array themselves in a species of armour to combat the obstacles that obstruct their path. Omnibuses and carriages, of course, are out of the question, and the occupations of humanity are regulated by a general governing board, which allots to every man his individual form of labour, the number of hours he shall work per day, and so on. The author applies for the post of Lecturer on the Nineteenth Century, but after being questioned by the President of the Labour Bureau, he is gravely informed that he knows nothing whatever about that age, and is appointed an apprentice to the Sewerage Board instead. In the horror of this blow, and the further discovery that the girl he is engaged to is a laundress, he wakes from the trance during which he is supposed to have propelled himself into the future; and the account of his strange experiences come to an end. It is an amusing book, though the satire is not very keen.

From the same.—'The Minister's Guest,' by Isabel Smith. Amid much that is ordinary and commonplace in this novel, a thread of human interest winds its way, and the reader finds himself following its course with some degree of attention. The Minister's Guest is a young girl who, by the desire of her dead mother, is to spend one year before attaining the age of twenty-one under the roof of the Rev. Josiah Ketterley, in order that she may 'become acquainted with the principles of Nonconformity, and be under his spiritual guidance.' Poor Nannie, as good and healthy-minded a girl as ever breathed, comes from the household of her uncle, a country parson of the old school, broad-minded to the extent of laxity, and she feels the change to the society of the Nonconformist minister and his hard, unsympathetic sister very acutely. But in time there enters fresh interest into her life through the son of Mr. Ketterley's senior deacon, and the young people fall very thoroughly in love with each other, while to complicate matters the minister himself falls a victim to Nannie's charms. There are likewise other disturbing elements which readers must discover for themselves. It is needless, however, to say that all difficulties are smoothed away in the end. The authoress has scarcely made effective use of her material, and with one or two exceptions her characters are wanting in well-defined outline. Possibly the best is the kindly-hearted minister himself, whose affection for his pretty guest causes him to be at constant war with the dictates inspired by his creed.

From Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.—'The Dogs of War: a Romance of the Great Civil War,' by [illegible]. The author has utilised the stirring times of the Roundheads and Cavaliers to very considerable advantage, and his story without being exceptionally heroic possesses much interest. There is, of course, a very decided villain in the plot, and the [illegible] of this gentleman to his well-merited doom forms no slight feature of the narrative. But the chief attraction centres round the adventures of the hero, Bernard Waller, son of a country gentleman, when he is detached by Cromwell from the main body of his men to carry a message to Lord Fairfax. These adventures are of a highly exciting character, and it need hardly be said that in the numerous misfortunes that befall the hero the malignant influence of the villain is clearly discernible. However, all ends happily, and Bernard is eventually left in undisturbed possession of his father's estate and with a pretty wife to keep him company. The volume contains several good illustrations by Lancelot Speed.

New Editions.—In 'The Lily' series, Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have published E. Everett Green's 'Monica.' The story is of the sentimental kind, without much depth or complexity of construction, but it is certain to be admired by a large number of readers.—From Messrs. Gale & Polden comes a fourth edition, revised and corrected up to August 1900, of 'The Military Law Examiner,' by Lieut.-Colonel Sisson C. Pratt. The book contains the questions set at public examinations in military law from 1890 to 1900, together with their answers. The matter is admirably arranged, and should be found of much service by those who are studying army questions.—Messrs. Rowland Ward & Co. have issued a second edition of Major H. G. C. Swayne's 'Seventeen Trips through Somaliland and a Visit to Abyssinia: a Record of Exploration and Big Game Shooting, with Descriptive Notes of the Fauna of the Country.' The volume is admirably produced, and in view of more recent investigations in Somaliland and Abyssinia acquires additional interest.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

MODEL AND BLACKBOARD DRAWING

By F. F. LYDON.

Designed to cover the new requirements of the Board of Education in both the subjects of which it treats.

The book consists of 44 Plates, which divide themselves into three classes, dealing respectively with the geometric models proper, common objects based on them, and blackboard exercises, treated boldly, and reproduced white on black. There are fifty-two pages of descriptive letterpress, in which the usual difficulties of the student are fully dealt with.

AMBIDEXTROUS AND FREE-ARM BLACKBOARD . . DRAWING

By F. F. LYDON.

[IN PREPARATION.

This work, in addition to a fully illustrated description of the 48 graduated plates, which are designed as a progressive course in free-arm drawing and design, gives numerous photographic blocks and diagrams illustrative of the method of work described, and of the best ways to fit up the classroom for the study of this subject. The letterpress shows how the subject may be inexpensively introduced into any school, and made an accessory to the ordinary drawing lesson.

Sailing Alone Around the World

. . BY . .

Capt. JOSHUA SLOCUM

With 63 Illustrations.

Being a Personal Narrative of the Experiences of the Sloop 'Spray' on her Single-Handed Voyage of Forty-six Thousand Miles.

8vo. 325 pp. 8s. 6d. net.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD writes:

'I have been instructed, delighted, and filled with admiration and interest while perusing this week the account by Captain Joshua Slocum (published by Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co.) of his voyage round the world, single-handed, on board his little boat the "Spray." Everybody who loves the ocean, or likes to hear about it; everybody who sets high value upon gallant, fearless deeds; everybody who rejoices to see the triumphs of manhood over solitude, danger, and death itself, should and must read this wonderful story of resolute adventure. I do not hesitate to call it the most extraordinary book, in its way, ever published; and the adventure itself by far the most courageous, sustained, and successful enterprise of the kind ever undertaken by mortal man.'

AN OFFER TO
Readers of the 'Publishers' Circular'

The Publishers of the ENGLISH CATALOGUE have decided to offer to Readers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, for a limited period only, the following volumes of the ENGLISH CATALOGUE at a greatly reduced price :—

Vol. 3.—1872=1880	=	=	published at 42s.
Index Volume 3.—1874=1880	=		,, ,, 18s.
Vol. 4.—1881=1889	=	=	,, ,, 52s. 6d.
Index Volume 4.—1881=1889	=		,, ,, 31s. 6d.
Vol. 5.—1890=1896	=	=	,, ,, 84s. net.

N.B.—Vol. 5 is classified in one alphabet, and therefore requires no Index Volume.

Here are five volumes in all, the published prices of which, as can be seen, amounted to a sum of £11. 8s.

THESE ARE NOW OFFERED AT FOUR GUINEAS

THE SET OF FIVE VOLUMES.

WHAT THE OFFER MEANS.

Vol. 5, until to-day, could only be obtained for £4. 4*s.*; an expenditure of the same sum will now give you four additional volumes—the five all bound in half leather. We make a present, that is to say, of four books published at 42*s.*, 52*s.* 6*d.*, 18*s.*, and 31*s.* 6*d.* respectively.

WHY THE OFFER SHOULD BE ACCEPTED.

Because it is a chance that will never occur again. We cannot offer Vols. 1 and 2 because they are out of print. Vol. 3 is getting low, and the time must come, sooner or later, when Vols. 4 and 5 will get scarce. They will not be reprinted.

Those who have already purchased Volume 5 and are in want of the preceding Two Volumes and Indexes can be supplied with them for Two Guineas Cash—otherwise the offer for the set cannot be broken.

The ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA can be reprinted. The ENGLISH CATALOGUE cannot.

Those persons who are fortunate enough to possess the Five Volumes of the English Catalogue and Index Volumes can find the title, author's name, and published price of any book published from 1835 to 1896. 300,000 books were published during those sixty years.

We cannot offer you the five complete volumes, but we do offer you the last three and two Index Volumes, which give you the books published from 1872 to 1896; but the available sets are few, and you must order quickly on the following or similar Order Form :—

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.

THE ROMANCE AND HISTORY OF THE HISTORIC FAMILIES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Under the General Editorship of Mr. W. A. LINDSAY, Q.C., M.A., J.P., D.L., Peerage Counsel.

VOL. I. THE HOUSE OF PERCY.

By GERALD BRENAN. With numerous Illustrations, and an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. 2 vols. price 25*s.* net; Large Paper Edition, price £3. 3*s.* net. Dedicated by Permission to HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

There is a very trumpet-peal in a great family name—a reveillé in the mere repetition of those two or three syllables by which we call some ancient, warrior race. The days may be dead when to cry 'A Percy!' north of Humber, or 'A Douglas!' in Teviotdale were to rouse the Borders: yet even to-day it is a sluggish blood that does not course the quicker at the mention of those old ban-dogs, who kept the gates so stoutly and so long. And what is true of the names of 'Douglas' and of 'Percy' is true likewise of other great British and Irish names—of Howard, of FitzGerald, of Grahame, of Courtenay. Each has its glorious store of old romance, each its memories of a great part played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Mr. R. CATON WOODVILLE'S Drawings for the above include

THE BATTLE OF NEVILLE'S CROSS.
Henry Percy, the smallest soldier of his time, shamed his men by rushing single-handed into the thick of the Scots.

Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL

beg to announce they will commence, on October 15, the publication of

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION

OF

TO BE KNOWN AS

THE AUTHENTIC EDITION

It will be completed in 21 vols. square crown 8vo. 5s. per vol.

TYPE.—The setting is in long primer, a thin open-face type, and specially cast for this edition, leaded out as much as is consistent with the quantity of matter that has to be dealt with in many of the works, so as to form volumes proportionate in form and comfortable to handle.

THE PAPER employed is of the same character throughout the set, and it of the make known as antique wove, bright in colour, and as light handling yet as opaque as it is possible to make it, having regard to the number of pages contained in most of the volumes. In the case of the thinner volumes, in order to preserve uniformity in thickness, the publishers have been compelled to use a somewhat thicker yet similar make of paper, thus accounting for the apparent difference in the appearance of the printing.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS include all the originals of Hablot K. Browne, Cruikshank, Seymour, Walker, Landseer, Maclise, Leech, Marcus Stone Cattermole, Luke Fildes, and the more recent ones by Charles Green, Maurice Greiffenhagen, Harry Furniss, F. H. Townsend, A. Jules Goodman, &c., as used for the first time in the well known Gadshill Edition.

a Frontispiece printed in Colour,

one of the most popular subjects having been chosen. The rest of the illustrations are reproduced by a new process. They will not be lettered in the usual way, but a tissue will be introduced in front of each plate with the title printed in red ink.

The first two Volumes, to be published simultaneously, will be . . .

New and Forthcoming Publications

A NEW NOVEL BY SILAS K. HOCKING.

TO PAY THE PRICE

First Large Edition Now Ready.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, bevelled boards, 3*s.* 6*d.* With Original Illustrations by ARTHUR A. DIXON.

'Whatever the setting of Mr. Silas Hocking's stories, he is always entertaining; there is a manly religious tone without cant in his books which makes them wholesome and attractive to all classes of readers. As in all Mr. Hocking's novels, there is plenty of incident in the story, with many dramatic scenes showing an intimate knowledge of many phases of life and keen observation of the lights and shades of human character.'—BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

NEW NOVEL BY MAX O'RELL.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3*s.* 6*d.*

WOMAN AND ARTIST

By MAX O'RELL.

Author of 'John Bull and his Island,' 'John Bull and Co.'

'Anything from the pen of the clever Frenchman, whose acute yet amiable criticisms of things English have amused us all, is sure to be interesting. The present story is more than that, for it is an admirable and fascinating piece of fiction, the underlying aim of which would seem to be the glorification of English womanhood. The book sparkles with bright phrases and sayings.'—LLOYD'S NEWS.

THE DOGS OF WAR

A ROMANCE OF THE CIVIL WAR.

By EDGAR PICKERING. With Illustrations by LANCELOT SPEED.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, 6*s.*

'Another old world tale, relating the adventures of one of Cromwell's celebrated company of Ironsides. Commencing with the refusal of Hampden to pay the ship-tax, we are introduced to Cromwell as a country farmer. . . . The story is brim full of incident and stirring adventure, told without extravagance or too strong evidence of party feeling.'—BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.

THE MYSTERY OF LADYPLACE

JARROLD & SONS' FORTHCOMING PUBLICATIONS

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS

By MAURUS JÓKAI.

THE DAY OF WRATH.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. Nisbet Bain. With new Photogravure Portrait of Jókai.

'The Day of Wrath' was written in the darkest hour of Maurus Jókai's life—when his beloved Hungary lay gagged and bleeding beneath the heel of Austria, and he himself earned a precarious livelihood by means of his ever ready pen, and the outcome of it all was this lurid, terrible, but withal most thrilling story. We shall find in it some of the author's most original comic types, and many episodes of irresistible humour. [In October.

By CURTIS YORKE.

CARPATHIA KNOX.

Author of 'Hush,' 'That Little Girl,' 'A Romance of Modern London,' &c. With a charming Photogravure Portrait of the author.

Written in Curtis Yorke's brisk fresh style, the novel treats of an idyllic saunter through Spain by a quartette composed of a delightful old lady, a girl, and two young men; the local colouring being faithfully and amusingly presented.

By MARY H. NORRIS.

THE GRAY HOUSE OF THE QUARRIES.

With etched Frontispiece by Edmund H. Garrett.

The Author introduces us to a new type in the literary field, viz. the Dutch-American people, being Rembrandt-Rubens pictures on fresh canvas.

By FERGUS HUME.

A WOMAN'S BURDEN.

Author of 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab' &c.

BY A POPULAR HUNGARIAN AUTHOR
now first introduced to English readers.

ST. PETER'S UMBRELLA.

By KÁLMÁN MIKSZÁTH.

With an Introduction by R. Nisbet Bain, a Photogravure Portrait of the Author and three Illustrations.

Miksáth was the first to study from the life the peculiarities and characteristics of the peasantry, the first to produce real vivid pictures of Magyar folk-life in a series of dramas, idylls—of unsurpassable grace and delicacy. And these exquisite miniatures are set in the frame of a lucid, pregnant, virile style. 'St. Peter's Umbrella' is one of Miksáth's best romances and gives one a new literary thrill. It is a quaintly delightful narrative in a romantic environment and will supply excellent entertainment.

A STIRRING ROMANCE OF VIRGINIA.

VIVIAN OF VIRGINIA.

Being the Memoirs of our first Rebellion, by John Vivian of Micole Plantation, Virginia.

By HULBERT FULLER.

With 10 charming Illustrations by Frank T. Merrill.

By MARYA RODZIEWICZ, Author of 'Anima Vilis.'

DISTAFF.

Translated by Count S. C. de Soissons. With specially engraved Portrait of the Author.

By JOHN MACKIE.

THE MAN WHO FORGOT.

Author of 'The Prodigal's Brother' &c.

In addition to the above Six Shilling Novels, several new Three-and-Sixpenny Novels, and a large number of specially attractive Books for Young People, will be published shortly.

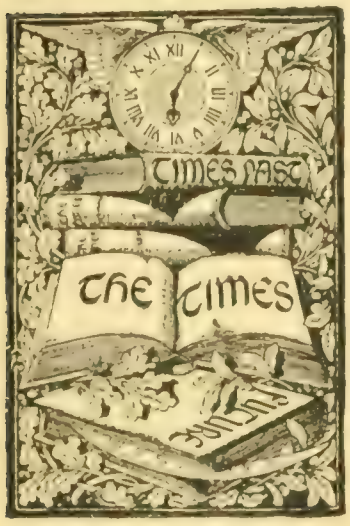
HISTORY OF THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA 1899-1900



Edited by L. S. AMERY,

Fellow of All Souls.

This important Work is expected to form five royal 8vo. volumes, each of about 320 pp.

The size of page and type will be the same, and the binding will be similar to those of Sir Herbert Maxwell's 'History of the Duke of Wellington.' The paper will be specially kept for the work, and the type entirely new.

With many Photogravure Portraits, Maps, and Battle Plans.

SPECIAL OFFER TO SUBSCRIBERS BEFORE PUBLICATION.

For a limited period orders will be accepted for the complete set at Five Volumes at £2 12s. 6d. net the set.

Such orders must be sent in at once with remittance for £2 12s. 6d. Each Subscriber will receive a numbered receipt from 'THE TIMES,' and the Work will be delivered to Subscribers in their numerical order.

The price will be raised when the Subscription List is closed.

N.B. It is possible, though not probable, that a Second Edition may be necessary. In this case those who subscribe will be entitled to the same advantage in subscription.

 The number of orders that have already come in are sufficient to show that there will be a very large demand for this Work, and if the mails from South Africa and other Colonies bring in orders to the extent anticipated, it may be impossible to supply all copies applied for. Those who apply early, may be compelled to wait some time for their copies, while others who apply later may receive theirs in a few days. Therefore should be applied for at once to all Booksellers who have not yet received them. Prospectus and Specimen page had.

THE CHILD:

By Dr. ALEXANDER FRANCIS CHAMBERLAIN, M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer on Anthropology in Clark University, Worcester, Mass.

[Ready early October.

The importance of the scientific study of children is rapidly becoming generally recognised. Dr. Chamberlain has for many years devoted himself to this study, and is recognised as one of the most learned and competent authorities on the subject. He approaches it with a full sense of its wide significance, and his book is an exhaustive summary of recent investigations.

Manuals of Employment for Educated Women

Edited by CHRISTABEL OSBORN.

[Ready October.

The object of this series of manuals will be to give to girls more particularly to those belonging to the educated classes who from inclination or necessity are looking forward to earning their own living, some assistance with reference to the choice of a profession, and to the best method of preparing for it when chosen. Each manual will be of the nature of a guide-book, and with this end in view, the information given has been rendered as definite as possible.

The Publishers beg to announce (a limited Edition only), for early publication, of this New and Important Work, entitled –

THE STABLE KEY
Or, Stud and Stable Studies.

By W. A. KERR, V.C. (formerly Second in Command Southern Mahratta Horse), Author of 'Riding,' 'Riding for Ladies,' &c.

Illustrated with a very large number of reproductions from unique Photographs and Original Drawings by the best Sporting Artists, and printed on paper specially manufactured.

A reference to the Table of Contents will convey an idea of the scope of the work, and of the various subjects treated of. Volume II. is mainly confined to the important industry of breeding, the vast importance of which, now that the empire of the horse is being threatened by the automobile, and its millionaire, amateur, and professional chauffeurs, cannot be over-rated. Great Britain and Ireland has long been noted for the super-excellence of their live-stock, and this vast pecuniary interest can only continue to hold its pride of place by a jealous supervision of our exclusive pedigree stock to the exclusion of all mediocrities. Millions can be saved yearly by the proprietors of live-stock being in a position to combat animal plagues, to nip the evil in the bud; and in all establishments, small or great, great saving may be effected by the intelligent feeding and supervision of studs, whether working or breeding. The vast importance of animal parasites and the extent of their ravages is a subject only now beginning to be realised. Illustrations have been freely used to elucidate the text.

The Trade are invited to apply for a handsomely printed and illustrated Prospectus for circulation among their Customers.

NON SEQUITUR

By Miss M. E. COLERIDGE,

Author of 'The King with the Two Faces' &c.

Miss M. E. Coleridge, whose recent novel was hailed by the Spectator as a work of genius, has collected together in this little volume a series of studies on books and travel, men and things, which, treated as they are with rare literary skill, make a very attractive example of a desultory book.

F. G. TAIT: a Memoir and Appreciation

By J. L. LOW.

Fully Illustrated. Large crown 8vo. 6s.

Mr. Low is specially qualified to undertake this work, being one of the late Lieutenant Tate's most intimate friends, and widely known as one of the best among amateur golfers and one of the soundest critics of the game. He is keenly appreciative of the great qualities of his lamented friend, who, according to Mr. Andrew Lang, was the most widely known and popular man in Scotland.

By the Author of 'Admirals All.'

FROISSART IN BRITAIN

By HENRY NEWBOLT.

With 24 Full-page Illustrations taken from Originals in the British Museum.

Large crown 8vo. 6s.

Mr. Newbolt, who is already widely known as a poet, a critic, and a student of mediæval history, has here gathered together and edited, from Lord Berners' great version, 'a delightful medley' of the most celebrated episodes of British history as told in the chronicles of Froissart, in a volume equally suitable for boys and men.

The Church Directory and Almanack. 2s. net.

2s. net.

THIS IMPORTANT NEW PUBLICATION will provide the Clergy and Laity, for the first time, with a very cheap and really serviceable Handbook. Several excellent Clerical Directories exist already, but their price makes it impossible that they can ever be adopted by the great body of the Clergy. Cheapness does not necessarily mean efficiency, but The Church Directory and Almanack will be both cheap and reliable. Moreover, it will cover a much wider ground than that of the ordinary Directory.

IT WILL BE

(a) Cheap. The published price—2s. net—will bring it within the reach of all.

(b) Trustworthy. No pains will be spared to secure absolute accuracy in every detail.

(c) Up-to-date. The latest information of changes, appointments, &c., will be found in its pages.

(d) Early. It will be published in December, so that before the New Year comes in the Clergy can have in their hands The Church Directory and Almanack for that year.

IT WILL CONTAIN

(a) Alphabetical List of Clergy of England, Ireland, Scotland (Episcopal Church), and Wales, with full particulars as to University, date of ordination, present preferments, postal address, net value of living, and population of parish.

(b) Alphabetical List of Benefices.

(c) Full List of Prelates.

(d) All the Ordinary Features common to a Clerical Almanack; and

(e) SEVERAL NEW AND ATTRACTIVE FEATURES which have never appeared in a Clerical Directory.

Christian Work on the Battle Field.

FROM ALDERSHOT TO PRETORIA: a Story of Christian Work among the Troops in South Africa.

By the Rev. W. E. SELLERS. With an Introduction by Rev. R. W. ALLEN. With 15 Illustrations. Cr. 8vo. cloth boards, 2*s.* 6*d.*

The War in South Africa has been remarkable for the extraordinary development of many forms of Christian work. Never has so much been attempted, and, notwithstanding many difficulties and imperfections, never before has so much been done for the bodies and the souls of our soldiers. This book contains many records of heroism, of suffering and sickness patiently borne, and of faithfulness to Jesus Christ, under great stress and trial. The story of what has been attempted in various forms of religious activity, and relief of the wounded and sick in connection with our arms in South Africa, arouses the admiration of all Christian people.

The Story of the War in South Africa.

WITH OUR SOLDIERS AT THE FRONT; or, Conflict and Victory in South Africa.

By HENRY JOHNSON, Author of 'Untrue to his Trust' &c. With 15 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth boards, 2*s.* 6*d.*

This is a straightforward, connected story of the great struggle between the British and the Boers in South Africa. While containing a succinct narrative of all the main occurrences, it also devotes special attention to instances of individual heroism, and to many forms of Christian work and service connected with the life and work of the Army.

LOUIS BECKE'S New Story.

Tom Wallis: a Tale of the South Seas.

By LOUIS BECKE, Author of 'Wild Life in Southern Seas,' 'By Reef and Palm,' 'Admiral Phillip,' &c. With 11 Illustrations by LANCELOT SPEED. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, 5*s.*

A first-rate book for boys. Mr. Becke has drawn upon his unrivalled knowledge of South Sea life in such a way as to produce a story which cannot fail to interest and in many ways to instruct its readers.

By HESBA STRETTON (New Editions).

Through a Needle's Eye.

By HESBA STRETTON, Author of 'Jessica's First Prayer,' 'Cobwebs and Cables,' &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth boards, 3*s.* 6*d.*

A powerful story by this well-known author, which has been out of print for a long time. In this new form it will doubtless receive a welcome from a large circle of readers.

The Lord's Purse-bearers.

By HESBA STRETTON, Author of 'Jessica's First Prayer,' 'Cobwebs and Cables.' With Frontispiece by LANCELOT SPEED. Crown 8vo. cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.*

This story has been out of print for some time. It is now reissued because the folly at which it aims—namely, the giving of alms without taking the trouble of investigating the merits of those who beg—is as rife as ever. It is written with all this accomplished writer's well-known style and power.

By M. H. CORNWALL LEGH.

Gold in the Furnace.

By M. H. CORNWALL LEGH, Author of 'An Incorrigible Girl' &c. With Illustrations by LANCELOT SPEED. Large crown 8vo. cloth boards, 3*s.* 6*d.*

A story of self-sacrifice. The heroine suffers for the crime of another. There is exceptional power in the description of prison-life and of the refining influence of suffering.

By Dr. GORDON STABLES, R.N.

Allan Adair; or, Here and There in Many Lands.

By Dr. GORDON STABLES, R.N., Author of 'In the Land of the Lion and the Ostrich,' 'Our Home in the Silver West,' &c. With Illustrations by ALFRED PEARSE. Large crown 8vo. cloth boards, 3*s.* 6*d.*

A lively tale for boys, in which the heroes visit many parts of the world, and pass through some very surprising adventures.

AN OFFER TO
Readers of the 'Publishers' Circular'

The Publishers of the ENGLISH CATALOGUE have decided to offer to Readers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, for a limited period only, the following volumes of the ENGLISH CATALOGUE at a greatly reduced price :—

Vol. 3.—1872-1880	= =	published at 42s.
Index Volume 3.—1874-1880	=	,, ,, 18s.
Vol. 4.—1881-1889	= =	,, ,, 52s. 6d.
Index Volume 4.—1881-1889	=	,, ,, 31s. 6d.
Vol. 5.—1890-1896	= =	,, ,, 84s. net.

N.B.—Vol. 5 is classified in one alphabet, and therefore requires no Index Volume.

Here are five volumes in all, the published prices of which, as can be seen, amounted to a sum of £11. 8s.

THE SET OF FIVE VOLUMES.

WHAT THE OFFER MEANS.

Vol. 5, until to-day, could only be obtained for £4. 4*s.*; an expenditure of the same sum will now give you four additional volumes—the five all bound in half leather. We make a present, that is to say, of four books published at 42*s.*, 52*s.* 6*d.*, 18*s.*, and 31*s.* 6*d.* respectively.

WHY THE OFFER SHOULD BE ACCEPTED.

Because it is a chance that will never occur again. We cannot offer Vols. 1 and 2 because they are out of print. Vol. 3 is getting low, and the time must come, sooner or later, when Vols. 4 and 5 will get scarce. They will not be reprinted.

Those who have already purchased Volume 5 and are in want of the preceding Two Volumes and Indexes can be supplied with them for Two Guineas Cash—otherwise the offer for the set cannot be broken.

The ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA can be reprinted. The ENGLISH CATALOGUE cannot.

Those persons who are fortunate enough to possess the Five Volumes of the English Catalogue and Index Volumes can find the title, author's name, and published price of any book published from 1835 to 1896. 300,000 books were published during those sixty years.

We cannot offer you the five complete volumes, but we do offer you the last three and two Index Volumes, which give you the books published from 1872 to 1896; but the available sets are few, and you must order quickly on the following or similar Order Form :—

King.—'The one thing that can justify this re-issue of Coleridge's classic poem is the excellent illustrative work done by Mr. Cole.'

Athenæum.—'Nearly every feature of this little book is tasteful and appropriate. Praise is due to the typography, paper, and binding, and, above all, to Mr. Cole's highly dramatic and spirited designs, of which the best shows the bride, her groom, and the "merry minstrelsy" entering the hall.'

Bookman.—'A beautiful edition—beautiful in print and paper, and, above all, beautifully illustrated. Mr. Herbert Cole's pictures are indeed the finest of their kind we have come across for a long time, and they are reproduced with rarest skill. All concerned are to be congratulated on a most successful production.'

The Publishers' Circular

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.

September 28, 1900.

Notwithstanding wars and political commotions, writers continue to write and publishers to publish with undiminished assiduity. The lists of forthcoming books which are printed in our present issue prove that hope springs eternal in the hearts of the literary fraternity. That hope has lately been severely tried and disappointed. A year ago the sudden outbreak of war in South Africa came as a disaster to the book-trade; and in the course of the present season, as if a conflict requiring two hundred and fifty thousand British soldiers were not enough, there came the sensational events in China, events sedulously exaggerated in horror by a section of the press which regards not truth or accuracy. Now, to make confusion worse confounded, or, more correctly, depression more depressed, we are in the tumult of a General Election. Such a series of misfortunes within the space of twelve months is, we imagine, unparalleled in the book-trade during the present generation. There can be no question that public events at home and abroad have seriously affected the sale of books during the past year. The other day one of the most popular of living novelists declared that the war had reduced his income at least 30 per cent., and what is true of him must be true of others. Yet the makers of books write as diligently as if wars and political tumults were unknown and the great indifferent public were waiting eagerly to buy and read each new work.

Perhaps it is with literature as with virtue: the pleasure of literary composition may be its own reward. At any rate, demand or no demand, literary toilers go on producing. Authors are probably the most sanguine race in existence: and it has to be added that publishers are hardly less hopeful. In any case, our pages prove that ample reading has been provided for the long winter evenings, when it is hoped an excited public will cool down and return to books. In the new literature, fiction, as usual, takes the lead. The novel is now almost as essential as the newspaper, as is shown by the fact that fiction constitutes 80 per cent. of the works sold by booksellers and circulated by librarians. There can be no complaint that the novelists have lately been idle. Alike in stories for adults and stories for young people, the lists are remarkably full. Biography is tolerably well represented, some of the works announced for the coming season being of more than common interest. The minor poet is, of course, in evidence; but the essayist and the historian are in the current phrase conspicuous by their absence. The essay, as understood by Carlyle and Macaulay, is indeed no longer produced. When Walter Pater died, the last of our great essayists disappeared. Mr. Leslie Stephen and Mr. Swinburne, it is true, remain, but they are producing little and can hardly be called essayists in the old sense. Of active historians there appears to be an almost complete dearth. Have all the great histories been written? It should certainly seem either that fresh opportunities are lacking, or that the historic faculty is no longer bestowed upon our men of letters. Or is it that history no longer 'pays'? Whatever the reason, the fact is indisputable that history in the great sense is no longer produced.

The literature of travel is also comparatively small this season; but it must not be inferred that the spirit which inspired Livingstone and Stanley is dead. One thing we note with satisfaction—and that is that few war books are announced. The Special Correspondent has been tried and found an unremunerative investment. Histories of the war will of course come, and will be welcomed by multitudes of intelligent readers. But the astounding verbosity of the 'Special' is to be curtailed, at any rate so far as publishers are concerned. This is an encouraging sign. Newspaper letters are good enough in newspapers, but they are out of place in books, and during the past season war correspondents have scored many failures. It is to be noted that many reprints of famous books are promised fact which demonstrates, we think, that the public taste is not so debased as the censors appear to imagine. On the whole, publishers provide ample material for a busy autumn season, and it is to be hoped that, when the General Election is over, booksellers may experience a brisk revival of trade.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

So far as names are concerned, the season's fiction is not remarkable. There are no new books from Mr. Meredith or Mr. Hardy, our foremost living novelists. Both, indeed, have ceased to write fiction, and are amusing themselves with verse. Mr. Kipling, too, is unrepresented; but we are to have novels from Mr. Anthony Hope and Mr. J. M. Barrie. Miss Marie Corelli is represented by 'The Master-Christian,' which is breaking the record. One finds from recent successes in fiction that the person who presents a tract in the guise of a novel is far likelier to see his or her book succeed than the person who relies on such qualities as style, humour, and truth to human nature to carry off a story. And it may be added that the tract in disguise is much more easily written than the good novel.

Messrs. W. Blackwood & Sons will shortly issue a volume of reminiscences by the late 'Father of the House of Commons,' Sir John Mowbray, Bart. It is entitled 'Seventy Years at Westminster.' Sir John was born in 1815, fifteen days before Waterloo. From a very early age he was keenly interested in politics, and being sent to Westminster School made full use of the scholars' privilege to come and go in the Houses of Parliament. In this way he heard all the great speakers of that day—Ellenborough, Lyndhurst, Grey, Peel, and others—and followed the historic debates on the Reform Bill. At Oxford he numbered among his friends and acquaintances men who afterwards rose to great fame—Roundell Palmer, Archibald Campbell Tait, Arthur Stanley, Robert Lowe, Gathorne-Hardy, and many more. He was a member of Lord Derby's Government in 1858. His articles in Maga recording his recollections of his seventy years at Westminster—unfortunately unfinished at the time of his death—are in this volume supplemented from his letters and notes under the editorship of his daughter.

The advance orders for 'The Times History of the War in South Africa' are already large and are increasing daily. We learn from the publishers, Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., that the subscriptions are reaching them from all parts of the empire, thus testifying to the widespread interest shown in the work. It is one, we think, which is well worth the attention of booksellers. The first volume will appear soon after the General Election is over.

The work on 'The Life and Speeches of Lord Rosebery,' which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. announce, should be particularly welcome to the large number of readers who have always taken a warm interest in his lordship's career. It will be in two large volumes, containing over 1,000 pages, with sixteen illustrations and portraits on plate paper, and two photogravure portraits. The speeches are reprinted by permission of the Earl of Rosebery and the Times. The main divisions of the book are devoted to Lord Rosebery's early years, his relationship with the Liberal party, work as an Imperialist, and his public utterances—these again being subdivided into those dealing with affairs of State interest, and those which treat of literary and general subjects.

Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel, 'Eleanor,' will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. on Nov. 1. The scene is laid in Italy, and the story is a romance of passion interwoven with a study of the deep currents of religious and political thought in Christendom.

The twelfth thousand of Mrs. Craigie's sequel to 'The School for Saints,' which was published by Mr. Fisher Unwin under the title of 'Robert Orange,' will be issued next week. At the same time Mr. Unwin will issue the eighth edition of 'The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford,' which forms part of his uniform edition of Mark Rutherford's works, produced under the editorship of Mr. Reuben Shapcott.

Of late years Mr. Rudyard Kipling has been rather sorely disappointing his admirers. 'Stalky & Co.' was not a good example of his work, and the South African Sketches which he contributed to the Express were not even tolerable journalism. We understand, however, that in his new story, which is to begin serially in the January number of Cassell's Magazine, he returns to India and his earlier manner. The tale is full of character and movement, and is said by those who have read it to be quite worthy of the hand that wrote 'The Drums of the Fore and Aft' and 'Krishna Mulvaney.' By the way, although Mr. Kipling's quality has been declining, his prices have been advancing. For the serial rights of his new book—which is comparatively short, being only some 60,000 words—he receives £5,000. This is probably the highest figure ever paid to an English author for a story of similar length. Making the reckoning so much per thousand words, Mr. Kipling's rates are the highest on record. Lucky Mr. Kipling!

'The Life and Literature of the Ancient Hebrews,' which may be said to be the crowning work of Dr. Lyman Abbott, is likely to appeal to Biblical students, and indeed to readers in general, on both sides of the Atlantic. Dr. Abbott's object is to trace in the Bible the origin and development of the religious, political, and literary life of the ancient Hebrews. Nothing is presupposed respecting inspiration—the character of the institutions and the literature are left to speak for themselves. In this way the results of the modern methods of studying the Bible are given to the general reader who cannot pursue the processes of the literary or scientific criticism of the Bible.

The 'Pali Jātaka' or 'Buddha Birth-Stories,' of which the Cambridge University Press is publishing a translation, are supposed to be the oldest folk-lore tales in existence. The work is expected to fill six or seven volumes, but at present only five volumes of the Pali text (published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.) have appeared. Each volume of the text is to be represented by a volume of the translation. The stories are generally told in a simple, popular style, with not infrequent touches of quaint humour and pathos; they are, in fact, a panorama of Hindu society in the immediate centuries before our era.

The sixth edition of 'An Absent-Minded War' has just been issued, and a seventh edition is in preparation. It may be stated that, notwithstanding the slump in general Khaki literature, seven editions of this book have been called for in four months, and the demand, far from falling off, increases week by week—a possible indication of the growing interest on the part of the electorate in the subject of army reform.

The biography of Lord Plunket, the late Archbishop of Dublin, upon which Mr. F. D. How has been some time engaged, is now finished, and will be published by Messrs. Isbister & Co. at an early date. For much of the information included in this work the author is indebted to Dr. Plunket's relatives, Lord James of Hereford, and others.

Dr. and Mrs. Bullock Workman, who have just returned from climbing in the Himalayas, have written an account of the two seasons which they passed in the provinces of Ladakh, Nubra, Suru, and Baltistan—amid the high valleys and snowy peaks of the Western and Eastern Karakoram, which Mr. Fisher Unwin has ready this week under the title, 'In the Ice World of Himalaya.' The book contains three maps and sixty-five photographs, photogravures, and sketches by the authors.

Among the many delightful writers who have arisen in the United States during the last thirty years none is more warmly admired by intelligent readers than Mr. T. B. Aldrich. For some unexplained reason he has never been popular in this country; but there ought to be an English public for the collected edition of his works, which is about to appear in seven volumes.

On October 10 Messrs. Methuen will publish Mr. Anthony Hope's new book, entitled 'Quisante.' It is a story of political life in England at the present day. While introducing many characters of social and political importance, it is mainly concerned with the career of Alexander Quisante, member for Denstead, a prominent politician.

The Monthly Review has had an exceedingly cordial reception, both from the Press and the public, and the sales have been very large for a half-crown review.

Among the new novels which Mr. Murray will publish almost immediately is a story by Mr. Joel Chandler Harris, entitled 'On the Wing of Occasions.' Mr. Harris has relinquished journalism, and intends henceforth to devote himself to literature. It is to be hoped he will give us more 'Uncle Remus' stories.

It seems we are to have yet another edition of the immortal 'Don Quixote,' edited by Judge Parry, with illustrations by Mr. Walter Crane. It is mainly intended for young people, and for this reason the narrative has been considerably abridged, the endeavour being to set forth the adventures of the knight and his squire, with their humorous discussions and observations in such form as may readily be grasped by the youthful mind. We do not as a rule approve of interference with the classics, but here there seems some justification for the abridgment. The publishers are Messrs. Blackie & Son.

Amongst works of fiction announced by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton are 'The Luck of Private Foster,' by Mr. St. John Adcock, and 'The Madness of David Baring,' by Mr. Joseph Hocking.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have issued the first part of their new edition of 'The Queen's Empire.' Strangely enough, publication was made on the very day the announcement appeared that His Royal Highness the Duke of York would visit Australia. The new edition of 'The Queen's Empire' will contain a number of additional pictures (expressly prepared from special photographs) from all quarters of the Empire, including Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, &c., illustrating the growth of the Empire in recent years, while the text of the work, which is by Mr. H. O. Arnold-Forster, will be brought down to the latest date.

A gift book, by F. Carruthers Gould and his son, F. H. Carruthers Gould, will be published shortly by Mr. Fisher Unwin under the title, 'Tales Told in the Zoo.' The tales are supposed to be told by an old adjutant stork in the Zoological Gardens to the assembled birds located there, and they deal with legendary and folk-lore stories of the origins of various creatures, mostly birds, and their characteristics.

In view of the interest taken in the war in South Africa, it is appropriate that the Art Annual (the Christmas Number of the Art Journal) for 1900, which will be published next month, should be devoted to the work of War Artists in South Africa. By the courtesy of the proprietors of the leading illustrated papers, a selection of fifty reproductions of original drawings will be found in the publication, including four Rembrandt photogravure extra plates. Among the many well-known artists whose work will appear will be found Caton Woodville, W. B. Wollen, John Charlton, W. T. Maud, Melton Prior, General Baden-Powell, Mortimer Menpes, Frank Dadd, Frank Craig, Dudley Hardy, W. Hatherell, E. Prater, and others.

After more than sixty years of popularity Lockhart's 'Life of Scott' needs no commendation. It will be sufficient, therefore, to welcome a new edition of it in Messrs. Macmillan & Co.'s admirable Library of English Classics. It is to be in five volumes. Two volumes have already appeared, and the remaining three will be issued immediately. Mr. A. W. Pollard contributes useful bibliographical notes.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. announce for early publication 'The Story of Belgium,' with a chapter on the Congo Free State, by Carlyle Smythe, B.A. The author, explaining his reasons for writing the book, says that three years ago, when he went to live in Brussels, he looked in vain for a compendious history of Belgium. There was nothing in English, and nothing really very good in French. Imagining that some of his compatriots might feel a like need, he devoted his leisure time to studying the authorities with a view of trying to supply the want.

'Animal Painters of England,' by Sir Walter Gilbey, will be issued by Messrs. Vinton & Co. almost immediately. The two volumes contain a brief history of the lives and works of fifty artists, from the year 1650, and the illustrations comprise fifty-eight specimens of their works and portraits. The same firm have in the press for early publication two other books by Sir Walter Gilbey: 'Ponies Past and Present,' and 'Horses Past and Present,' which will be ready about the same time. Messrs. Vinton & Co. will also issue a work by William Royle, entitled 'Dalmatia Illustrata,' which contains thirty plates from original drawings by the author.

The Rationalist Press Association will issue, through Messrs. Watts & Co., on October 1, simultaneously with Messrs. Harper & Brothers in New York, the authorised English translation of Professor Ernst Haeckel's 'Die Welträthsel,' under the title of 'The Riddle of the Universe at the Close of the Nineteenth Century.'

A SUBSCRIBER TO THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR FROM THE BEGINNING, 1837.

We were under the impression that our last original subscriber died three or four years ago in Edinburgh, but we have just received a letter from a clergyman who says: 'I think I have taken P.C. in from the very beginning.'

We have now no means of tracing back our subscribers from the beginning in 1837; but it would give us great pleasure to learn if there are any more of the old originals who have stuck to us so long. We cannot but admire the friendly consistency of any subscriber who, beginning with us in his youth, has continued his support all through the Victorian Era up to the present day.

LIBRARIANS IN CONGRESS.

This year the Library Association met in Bristol and the business was opened on Tuesday with the presidential address from Sir Edward Fry. He drew attention to the evil tendencies of certain forms of current literature. The varied form in which the poison was presented increased the evil; sometimes it was half concealed beneath a literary garb, sometimes it hid itself under the mask of scientific investigation. Wherever the Press was free, the President went on, it gave expression not only to the better feelings and the loftier aspirations of mankind, but to the baser motives of the natural man, to his hatred of his fellow-men, to his selfishness, to his lust. Books were a form in which knowledge presented itself, and knowledge was not of good alone. Shelley had compared knowledge to the Nile, bringing at once fertility and malaria. If such, then, were the opposite characters of the classes of literature, how were they to defend the existence of general libraries? With all deference it must be said that one of the functions of a general library was the preservation of rubbish. As the refuse heaps of prehistoric villages had enabled the antiquaries to restore in part the society and mode of life of the palæolithic and neolithic man, as the waste-paper baskets of the Fayoum had made the social arrangements of the Greek veterans of Arsinoë known to us, so in still greater degree would such collections as that of the British Museum enable the historian of a future age to trace the growth of railways from the accumulated 'Bradshaws,' to see the multifarious business of life from the successive volumes of 'Whitaker,' to sound the depths of human folly and inanity from a huge collection of shilling or sixpenny dreadfuls. The dangers which had attended the destruction of books were reasons for their undistinguishing preservation. But public libraries should not be conducted on the principle of no selection. A library which presented with equal facility and with an equal recommendation to the unskilled reader the noblest and the vilest productions of the human mind could hardly come up to the ideal of the Egyptian king and prove a fitting hospital for the soul, for its wards would be infected with the fever of passion, with the subtle bacteria of impure suggestion or unholy thought. Every change in social or national life, even when directly for the good of the State, was almost necessarily accompanied by some collateral and special danger of its own. The spread of education had created distinct and appreciable dangers; the capacity to read had gone beyond the capacity to judge of the character of what was read, and had gone still more in excess of the desire to think; hence it became of great moment by every means in their power to turn reading into channels which should really fertilise the mind and strengthen the growth of all noble emotions. He was not pleading for a censorship of the Press or an index expurgatorius; he was not praising 'a fugitive and cloistered virtue,' nor did he desire to suppress fiction; but he did desire to call their attention to this—that the widely-spread power of reading should bring knowledge of the right method of using that power, and the easy access to books should bring a sense of the responsibilities thus created. The parent and schoolmaster had the primary burden of enforcing these duties, but the public librarian also had an important part. The limited funds at his disposal forced him to exercise a beneficial censorship.

Dr. Richard Garnett moved a vote of thanks to Sir Edward Fry for his address.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Henry R. Tedder and carried with acclamation.

The first paper was 'A Survey of the Public Libraries of Bristol,' by the Librarian, Mr. Norris Mathews, who traced their history back to the year 1613, when a public library was founded on the site of the present Central Library by Archbishop Matthew, who was a native of Bristol. It was interesting to know that many books which formed a part of the original collection were still housed in the old City Library. In recent years the spread of the library movement had been very rapid, and there were now ten libraries in operation.

Dr. C. W. Kimmins, secretary of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, read a paper on 'Lectures under the Public Libraries Acts.' He bore testimony to the good work done in this direction by voluntary effort, which, however, had been sadly hampered by fear of the auditor in connection with incidental expenses. Committees should have the power of paying lecturers. The great rush for evening instruction brought into being by the Technical Instruction Acts had almost entirely a commercial trend. The curricula of the technical institutes practically excluded instruction in all matters pertaining to life and conduct.

Mr. C. F. Newcombe, librarian of Toynbee Hall, London, recommended the establishment in public libraries of readers' unions to bring readers into contact with each other, and into more intimate touch with the books in the library. Such a union, which had been in force for some years at Toynbee Hall, was described.

On Wednesday Mr. T. Aldred read a paper on 'Book Selection and Rejection,' and condemned the policy of supplying only what the public ought to read, to the exclusion of much that they desired to read.

Mr. A. G. Temple presented a paper on 'Art Galleries in connection with Public Libraries.' He dwelt on the usefulness of picture galleries to libraries, the help the literary student derived from a properly organised gallery, and the material aid afforded to the art student by full access to a good library. Books should take precedence of pictures as a public requirement, inasmuch as the uninformed mind was unable to appreciate the fine art of a picture.

Mr. L. M. Griffiths, hon. librarian of the Bristol Medical Library, read a paper on 'Some Things of General Interest in the Bristol Medical Library,' in which he treated of the literature of the social life of the hot-wells in the eighteenth century, of several rare Harvey books, and some personalia of Edward Jenner.

MARK TWAIN ON THE WAR.—A short time ago, it is related, Mark Twain was dining at the house of a friend in London, and seated next to him was an American who had only that day reached England. They were, of course, talking war, and the newcomer, wishing to know the feeling of England in the matter of the future of the Transvaal, asked Mark Twain how he found public sentiment in England regarding the independence of the republics. 'Well,' said the genial humourist, 'I find the English are paraphrasing a part of the burial service. They are all quietly repeating, "Mr. Gladstone giveth, and the Lord Salisbury hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."'

BOOKS ON CHINA.

The protracted uncertainty as to the ultimate result of the negotiations in China naturally calls attention to books about the Celestial Empire. One of the latest of these, 'Superstition, Crime, et Misère en Chine' (Paris, Masson), by Dr. J. J. Matignon, Assistant Surgeon-Major, attached to the French Legation at Pekin, has, at the express desire of its author, been presented to the Paris Académie des Sciences by M. Marcel Monnier, the well-known explorer and correspondent of Le Temps. Among the subjects which have been diligently studied and are exhaustively treated by Dr. Matignon are: suicide, the auto-cremation of Buddhist priests, the eunuchs of the imperial palace at Pekin, the feet of Chinese women, infanticide, congenital and cutaneous stigmata, and Chinese and Mongolian medicine and surgery. A most interesting chapter from a sociological point of view is that on the beggars of Pekin, who form a secret society which has undoubtedly played an important part in recent events. That the author is one of those unfortunate Europeans who took refuge in the British Embassy at Pekin adds a painful interest to his valuable work.

Another work which throws light on the outbreak of hostility to foreigners in China is 'Hang hai yin ts'ao,' by the Seventh Prince, brother of the Emperor Kwang-su, Chinese text, with a French translation and notes by A. Vissière. (Leyden, E. J. Brill.) The author of this work, Prince Tchouen, was father of the well-meaning Emperor Kwang Siu, who by a recent decree of the Dowager Empress was declared incapable of reigning, and, at the Empress's dictation, has appointed as his successor Pou Tchun, son of Tsai Yi, Prince of Tuan. Prince Tchouen—who, as father of Kwang Sin, occupied at the time nearly the same rank as that now held by Prince Tuan—made in 1886 a tour of inspection as director of the recently created council of the Admiralty. The volume contains his account, written in verse, of this tour, which was not long, for it only included Tientsin, Wei-Hai-Wei, Port Arthur, and Tche-fu. As the Seventh Prince was as frank and peaceful in character as Prince Tuan is gloomy and fanatical, we can the better judge from the opinions and prejudices of the former, as set forth in the translation of M. Arnold Vissière, chief translator of the French Legation at Pekin, what are likely to be those of Prince Tuan, who is said to have so greatly influenced recent events. The following quotation indicates a feeling towards foreigners which is rather significant in the light of recent events: 'Months and years pass in peace. But powerful enemies are still with us. May an energetic inspiration animate us, and may we repulse the invaders with our arms! Persistent labour overcomes the most arduous task. I myself am unable to make foreign nations keep silence. But our great minister Li Hung Chang knows how to do so.' When at Port Arthur the Prince had an interview with Admiral Hamilton, to whom he sent some verses beginning: 'Take care not to boast about arms. You have taken the trouble to come a very long way that you may be able to talk to us about uncultivated regions inhabited by barbarians. On again meeting Admiral Hamilton and the French Admiral Riennier at Chi-fu, the Prince notes with satisfaction: 'The great secretary Li Hung Chang told me that being a prince of the first rank I ought not to ask my visitors to take a seat and that I need not return their visits. He received them courteously, and went on board the admirals' ships to return their visits. By thus exalting me he showed respect to the country.' At Tientsin the Prince was struck with the assiduity of the military cadets in study, and their diligence in military exercises. It was these military cadets who proved their skill as artillerymen the other day when so many European troops were killed at Tientsin. Some of the Prince's remarks are quite epigrammatic; as, for instance, when writing of the telephone, he observes: 'We may now close our letter boxes!' The volume is as instructive as interesting.

The pictures there shown are transparencies on glass, and represent the most brilliant tints and hues, as well as the more sombre tones, of natural or other objects. The subjects include portraits, landscapes, architecture, &c., and it is claimed for the new process by which they are produced that it can be used just as well for 'instantaneous' exposures as for those still-life subjects which have hitherto been the only ones attempted by workers in colour-photography.

The process by which the pictures are produced is known as the McDonough-Joly process, as its essential features were invented independently by Dr. Joly in Ireland and by Mr. McDonough in America, and were, curiously enough, patented almost exactly simultaneously on the two sides of the Atlantic in 1894.

Every photographer, whether amateur or professional, will eventually be enabled to use the process, which, it is stated, has the great virtue of needing no special technical knowledge beyond that required in ordinary photography, and which only necessitates comparatively inexpensive additions to existing cameras. Ordinary portraits, with the tints of life instead of monochrome, will be made in this way (as they are being made already by one or two photographers in America); amateurs can make natural-colour prints of scenes photographed on their tours; magic lantern slides can be made almost as cheaply as the uncoloured slides of the present day, and will be of immense value for entertainment and educational purposes; and finally, prints on paper, for book and magazine illustration, can be made direct from nature, in the colours of nature, and printed with the text, if necessary.

The process is based on the researches of Clerk-Maxwell and on the Young-Helmholtz theory of the nature and properties of light. Like most of the other processes which have had some measure of success, it proceeds on lines of analysis and synthesis, breaking up the effect of light upon the photographic plate into three separate colour-sensation effects, and in the resulting print or transparency re-combining the three effects. The essential difference between the McDonough-Joly process and the processes of Ives, Lumière, and others, is that while the latter have to make separate exposures and separate negatives for the three colour impressions, as well as three separate colour impressions in their positives for viewing, the McDonough-Joly process makes the three impressions simultaneously, by one exposure, upon one plate, through the intervention of a screen ruled with the three fundamental colours in very fine parallel lines. Further, the McDonough-Joly process can produce prints on paper by methods similar to those commonly in use by professionals and amateurs; and it can produce photo-mechanical prints, for book illustration at a low cost.

FRENCH PERIODICALS AND NEWSPAPERS IN 1900.

As one of the principal reasons assigned for a falling-off in book-buying is the large number of newspapers and periodicals published now-a-days, some statistics of the present condition of such publications in France may well find a place in the Publishers' Circular. We premise that the figures are taken from the 'Annuaire de la Presse Française et du Monde politique en 1900' recently issued.

The newspapers and periodicals published in Paris alone number 2,790, showing an increase of 105 on the total of last year, of 203 on that of 1898, and of 463 on that of 1897. The political periodicals are comparatively few in number—only 164 in all—comprising 68 republican, 30 radical or socialist, 60 conservative, 8 nationalist and anti-Jewish, and 42 of various shades in public opinion. As regards periods of publication, these 2,790 undertakings may be classified as follows: 146 daily, 753 weekly, 42 bi-weekly, 8 tri-weekly, 915 monthly, 428 bi-monthly, 31 tri-monthly, 112 quarterly, 5 half-yearly, 65 appear at intervals of two months, and 285 are published irregularly.

There are only 81 purely political papers among the 146 dailies. The rest may be thus classified: 1 on government, 1 agricultural, 4 advertising, 2 automobilist, 1 fine art, 2 colonial, 8 commercial, 1 feminist, 3 obituary, 1 politico-economical, 13 financial, 2 illustrated, 1 educational, 4 legal, 1 literary, 1 matrimonial, 1 medical, 1 military, 7 sporting, 3 foreign or provincial, 2 of novels, 1 scientific, 4 theatrical. Of the 164 political publications, 81 appear daily, as already stated, 54 are weekly, 3 bi-weekly, 8 bi-monthly, 6 monthly, and 12 appear at irregular intervals. It will be seen from the above figures what a large number of periodicals appear weekly and monthly, amounting to 1,668, and thus forming by far the larger part of Parisian periodicals.

The number of 'revues' (a term perhaps most nearly represented in English by 'magazine') is 185, comprising 76 monthly, 32 bi-monthly, 17 weekly, 28 quarterly, 13 published every two months, and 19 appearing at uncertain intervals. There are also 285 publications which appear occasionally when called forth by some striking occurrence.

There is a slight decrease in the number of country and colonial periodicals and newspapers, which are now only 3,972 as compared with 4,051 in 1899.

TRADE CHANGES.

Mr. William Johnston, High Street, Brechin, has assumed his son, Mr. William Johnston, jun., as partner in the firm of Black & Johnston, booksellers. He has been associated with the business for the past nine years, and the style of the firm will remain unaltered.

Messrs. Farrer & Sons, the well-known booksellers of Reading, have this week opened a new branch at 329 Oxford Road in that town. One of the features of the establishment will be a library, containing works by all the most popular authors of the day.

Messrs. Webb, Son & Co., the bookbinders, have removed from Lovell's Court, Paternoster Row, to larger and more convenient premises at 27 Ray Street, Farringdon Road, E.C., where they will be better able to cope with the requirements of an increasing business.

LONDON AND NEW YORK AS LITERARY CENTRES.

New York is not the literary metropolis of the nation, says Mr. C. G. D. Roberts, in the sense that London is. She has rivals in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago—even, it would seem of late, in Indianapolis. Each of these cities is more or less of a publishing centre, drawing off from New York some appreciable portion of those precious particles which with concentration and cherishing might come to form a literary atmosphere. New York is, of course, the chief of the literary centres in America. More successful authors are to be found here than in any other city on the continent; but they have no background of tradition to support them. They seem like new comers, as, indeed, they usually are; and one does not feel that the homes which they make here are permanent. Apartment houses and Harlem flats can hardly hope to become shrines for the worship of the literary pilgrim. All is fluctuation here, and restlessness. If one goes away for a year, and on his return wants the address of this or that distinguished author, one must go to the distinguished author's publisher to find it; for it is odds but the apartments lately dedicated to the scintillating line are now occupied by a haberdasher.

London has drawn to herself, for century after century, all the literary life of the nation. Every man of letters that Great Britain produces, though he may choose to eat and sleep at Land's End or John o' Groat's, is tied by many vital bonds to London. As a rule, he comes to live so near as to form a throbbing factor in the literary life of London. If his house is in the provinces, he is sure to have a regular London address—rooms or a club. And such address is pretty likely to be permanent. The English man of letters, however much he may wander up and down the earth, does not roam at ease unless he knows there is a fixed place to go back to, where he will find his pipe and his pen just where he left them. Such a homing place, long occupied, gathers personality. London is so full of these places that their flavour tells.

AMERICANISING ENGLISH NEWSPAPERS.

In a recent issue of the Publishers' Circular was printed an account of the Annual Meeting of the Institute of Journalists and a report of Sir James Henderson's inaugural speech. Writing to the Saturday Review, Mr. Joseph Banister endorses the president's condemnation of the Americanising of English journals. Says Mr. Banister: 'Pretty well all the London halfpenny daily newspapers at any rate appear to be conducted with a view of making them as much like the lower-class American newspapers as possible. I notice, however, that while the editors are fairly successful in copying the worst characteristics of their prototypes, they fail altogether in imitating their more desirable features. The London paper seems to have all the vulgarity and unreliableness of the American yellow journal, but without its enterprise, originality, cleverness, and humour. Like the American paper, our halfpenny sheet is apparently quite willing to cater for the various foreign elements in the population, but it goes about it in a different way, as even those American papers that are printed in foreign languages and circulate entirely among 'foreign-born Americans' do not publish slanders upon the American people, do not engage anti-American foreigners as contributors, do not make a rule of siding with the foreigners in international disputes, and do not suppress or distort important political and other news in order to please their readers.

'On the whole our halfpenny sheets are vastly inferior to the papers they strive so hard to imitate, and this inferiority seems to be largely due to the relatively inferior class of persons they employ. It has apparently not occurred to their proprietors that in order to make their papers a good imitation of the trans-Atlantic publications they must offer the same rate of remuneration that the American pressman receives. Nowadays, when a third-class, ten-dollar-a-week "journalist" disappears from the free-lunch counters of an American city, it is assumed that he has become one of the numerous American journalistic experts that have left their country to introduce American methods in the conduct of London halfpenny daily newspapers. Most of the Americans employed on our halfpenny sheets seem to be of this ilk.

'Now it is scarcely necessary to say that no New York or Chicago newspaper man that is worth the street-car tickets he uses could be induced to leave his country for a salary of two or three pounds a week. A first-class reporter in New York can make from seven to ten pounds a week, while some men earn as much as twenty pounds. Judging by the manner in which the original matter that appears in the average halfpenny London daily is written and handled, this last mentioned sum is about the amount likely to be needed to pay the weekly wage of its entire reportorial and editorial staff.'

THE NOVEL OF THE FUTURE.

When the novel of the past becomes monotonous, critics sometimes turn to the novel of the future as a subject on which to exercise the imagination. Perhaps it was discontent with what is, and has been, which has led Mr. Julian Hawthorne to turn for relief to what he fancies will or may be. Of late years, he remarks in the course of a recent article, the historical novel has been much in vogue. There has been, he says, a fad in that direction, and all of us have been following adventures and intrigues that are supposed to have occurred a hundred or five hundred years ago. The popularity of these tales has been manifestly due to the fact that they have presented the ideal and the romantic aspect of the selected scenes, and have ignored the dulness and limitations which would render life as it was in those times intolerable to the man of to-day. Or we have had novels of contemporary character and manner, some of which, like 'David Harum,' have found an immense public; but the principle of vitality in these stories is found to be but ephemeral, because after the humour of the characterisation has been recognised, and the ripple of incident has been fathomed, nothing remains to command renewed attention. Of course, real genius must always have its following, because it holds us not so much by the topic which it handles, as by the manner of the handling.

Imagination is indispensable; to repeat the humdrum inventions of a Bellamy would be futile. The writer should profoundly search the springs of human nature for treasures which shall seem amazing and unexpected to the ordinary reader, but which to the thoughtful critic shall be acknowledged as more likely to be true than more obvious deductions would be. To what issue are we being brought by the triumphs of science, and by the increasing freedom which is coming to characterise our social relations? What will be the effect of the mastery over natural resources and the comprehension of natural and economic laws which appear to await us? What would be the mental and moral attitude of a man who was placed in possession of what we would now regard as complete control over his physical environment? Would he be happier and more active and productive than now? Orwould he sink into a slough of ennui and hopelessness? Or would he emerge into another sphere altogether of existence, and interest himself in matters which are now not even conceived of? Authentic answers to these questions would be interesting and possibly instructive.

AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. George Allen.

Turner and Ruskin, an Exposition of the Work of Turner, with descriptive and critical passages from the Writings of John Ruskin, edited and arranged, with a biographical note on J. M. W. Turner, by Frederick Wedmore, illustrated with 90 plates in photogravure; a special edition of 150 copies, in 2 vols., containing plates on India paper; also an edition in 2 vols.; Thoughts from Ruskin, selected and arranged by Prof. Attwell, with biography and portrait; The Story of my Life, by Augustus J. REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Many Days After,' by C. Howell. We are early introduced in this novel to a singularly disagreeable, unsympathetic old gentleman, whose apparent object in life is to depress and mortify those about him. This unamiable being is Mr. Percy Carnac, father to an attractive daughter, who is beloved by Mr. Gaspard Stirling, a middle-aged solicitor. Unfortunately Stirling is not the suitor's right name, but Aikman, his father, now a common felon, having seduced Carnac's betrothed from her allegiance in the days long gone by; and this coming to the knowledge of Carnac, he refuses his consent to the match, and heaps many bitter taunts and threats on Stirling's head. The solicitor, enraged beyond control, then strikes the old gentleman on the temple, and the blow proves mortal. Afterwards, though Stirling's guilt is never revealed, he is overwhelmed with secret reproaches, and, foolishly taking to walking in his sleep, he one morning awakens to find himself at Carnac's graveside, when with a loud shriek he falls down and dies! Such is the main thread of the story, but there are interlacing interests. It is not a good novel, nor yet a particularly bad one, but it rests on the border line that marks the indifferent.

From Mr. S. T. Freemantle.—'Affairs of the Heart,' by Violet Hunt. The author's bright pointed style is very prominent in these stories, and they will certainly keep the reader well amused. They are mostly of smart society life, and the entanglements into which the human heart is apt to project itself are related with agreeable piquancy. Violet Hunt knows her world well, is quick to observe significant characteristics, and has a happy facility of expression. But these are qualities which readers of her previous works are well acquainted with, and it is necessary only to say that in 'Affairs of the Heart' she is seen almost at her best.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden.—'Regimental Duties made Easy: Subject "A" for the Promotion Examinations,' by Captain S. T. Banning (Gale & Polden's 'Military' series). This little work will no doubt prove useful to officers seeking promotion. In the matter itself there is of course nothing that is new, but the arrangement of the material seems calculated to afford the student a clear and intelligible view of the subject, through which it should be easy to grasp and retain the essential facts. The information has been taken principally from the parts of the Queen's Regulations bearing on regimental duties, and from the instructions given in the Army Forms used in connection with these regulations. The volume well sustains the excellent reputation of the 'Military' series.

From Messrs. Marion & Co.—'A Handbook of Photography in Colours.' The subject with which this little volume deals has increased so greatly in interest and importance during the last few years that readers, we are sure, will welcome its appearance with pleasure. The book is divided into three sections. In the first Mr. Thomas Bolas treats of the historical development of Heliochromy, the various processes employed, and direct heliochromes on silver chloride; in the second, Mr. Alexander A. K. Tallent discusses Tri-colour Photography; and in the third Mr. Edgar Senior writes of Lippmann's process of Interference Heliochromy. Each of these subjects is very thoroughly gone into, and with the aid of numerous diagrams made quite clear. There are also three coloured plates.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Cunning Murrell,' by Arthur Morrison. There is nothing particularly exciting or eventful in 'Cunning Murrell,' and yet the book possesses an attraction that it is not altogether easy to define. Possibly it is the old-time air that seems to hang over its pages, carrying us back to the days when witchcraft was a common superstition in the land, and smuggling was rife. 'Cunning Murrell' is a little old man, 'quick and alert of movement, keen of eye, and sharp of face,' who had the reputation in the little village of Hadleigh of being particularly well able to cope with the devil and all his emissaries. Murrell's principal method of exorcising his Satanic Majesty would seem to have been through the medium of an iron bottle filled with a liquid containing dried leaves of various kinds, pins and needles, and a little heap of horse-nails. Thus primed, the bottle was carefully stoppered, and then placed in a red-hot fire, where, of course, when sufficiently heated, it loudly exploded. The person who then appeared among the awe-stricken spectators was the individual who had placed a charm on the bewitched man or woman. Unfortunately this method frequently gave rise to misunderstandings—as in this story; an innocent old woman accidentally straying into the bakehouse, where the mysterious rites were proceeding, and being immediately hailed by the assembled onlookers as a witch. All the interest of the book, however, gathers round 'Cunning Murrell' himself, though there are some specimens of village intelligence that are certain to provoke hearty amusement. Of the witch doctor Mr. Morrison has evidently made a careful study, and so complex is the portraiture that it is difficult to say how much of Morrison's actions were due to low cunning, how much to actual belief. The story, as we have said, is an interesting one, though scarcely so striking as some of the author's previous works.

From Messrs. James Nisbet & Co.—'On War's Red Tide, a Tale of the Boer War,' by Gordon Stables, M.D., illustrated. The bright, genial style of the author, with which readers, more particularly of the youthful persuasion, have been familiar for so many years past, is once again conspicuous in his present story. Perhaps we should say almost too conspicuous, since his tendency to jovial discursiveness occasionally takes him off the direct track of the narrative, which loses by want of effective concentration. But, after all, what do boys care about this? They like to be on familiar terms with their author—to be addressed in the conversational, yarn-spinning fashion; and in Dr. Stables they have a narrator entirely after their heart. Of exciting episode the story is certainly not without its full share, and the chief events of the Boer war have been very happily interwoven with the spirited adventures of the hero, Arthur McArthur, and his dashing boy friend, Jack Murray, of H.M.S. Thunderbolt. Incidentally a good deal of light is thrown on Boer characteristics, and the occurrences of the story go to show that if there are good British and bad British, so there are good Boers and bad Boers; every nation has its redeeming qualities. Readers generally will find Dr. Stables' story a very invigorating piece of work, and adventurous lads will especially delight in its pages.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'The Secret of the Crater (A Mountain Moloch),' by Duffield Osborne. Plenty of stirring excitement characterises this story, and the old attraction of savage priestcraft and its human sacrifice is trotted out to renewed advantage. It would seem that so recently as 1839 there was an unknown island in the South Pacific Ocean named Karana. This island was sighted by the United States sloop-of-war Falcon, after a spell of very bad weather, and an investigation was made. The territory was then found to be inhabited by a peculiar race of people, descendants apparently of the ancient Phœnicians and Carthagenians, whose isolation from the rest of the world had preserved their national characteristics. Mingled with these, however, were a large number of dark-faced men, priests of the aboriginal stock, whose horrible religious rites still held sway in the island. The object of this worship was the great god Tao, who in moments of anger signified his displeasure by belching forth fire and smoke and streams of molten lead from the mountain in the centre of the island, which was supposed to be his special abiding place. At such times it was necessary (so the high priest said) to offer the most beautiful of the king's daughters as a bride to the wrathful god; and this was done by shutting her up in a small temple in the sacred land of Tao, where she miserably died of starvation. Now it so happened that on board the Falcon was a young lieutenant who had a knowledge of many languages, and he alone was able to hold anything like converse with the islanders. He also saw the king's daughter next destined for sacrifice, and she was very beautiful: which is as good as saying he fell madly in love with her. What then does this foolish young gentleman do, after vainly endeavouring to persuade his captain to make war upon the Carthagenians, but remain on the island after his vessel has left, determined to prosecute his suit or to die. But, after all, it is a little ungrateful thus to speak of our impressible, high-spirited hero, since his 'foolishness' is productive of so interesting and absorbing a romance. Whether he ultimately succeeds in carrying off the princess we are not going to say, but we can assure our readers that his adventures are thrilling in the extreme.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Neighbours,' by Julia M. Crottie. Under this title are gathered together a number of short, readable Irish stories, concerning inhabitants of Innisdoyle. The longest of these is entitled 'Miss Dunne's Monument.' Miss Anastasia Dunne was a lady who, after considerable hardships in Innisdoyle, emigrated to America, and returned some twenty-five years later with her fortune apparently made. She now set herself in an unsympathetic masterful fashion to the correction of her neighbours' faults, carrying her own affairs in a high-handed manner that earned her universal dislike. At length her health showed signs of a serious breakdown, and this turned her thoughts to the question of her monument, which she determined should eclipse that of any other in the chapel yard. The most expensive among them was O'Reilly's, the publican, which cost fifty pounds, and she would get one for sixty pounds—the amount for which she was to sell her business—and thus exceed all her neighbours to the very last. But the death of Miss Dunne, so confidently foretold, did not take place, and so she found herself the possessor of an unmarketable gravestone and nothing else. Eventually she was taken to the workhouse, where she had caused other and better people to precede her. These stories are very slight, but possess a pleasant interest, and shows some dexterity in character portrayal.

From the same.—'Tales of the Pampas,' by William Bulfin. The latest volume of the 'Over Seas Library' is happy in the general character of its contents. All the stories have a free-and-easy, rollicking air that is peculiarly appropriate to the series. A very rough-and-tumble lot these dwellers in the Pampas seem to be, but the account of their doings possesses an unsophisticated charm not always observable in the descriptions of more civilised life. Their experiences in the way of fighting, swindling, drinking, shooting, camp life generally, are very much on a par with those of the early gold mines; it is a wild, lawless life they tell of, and the interest arises from the freedom and spirit of adventure that pervades it. There are certainly stirring moments in it, and the account of the horse race between Castro and Barragan for instance, with the subsequent fight between these jockeys, is fraught with the greatest excitement. Readers will find this a very entertaining volume to spend an odd half-hour with.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Love that Lasts,' by Florence Warden. A very peculiar set of people meet us at every turn of this novel, and the life they lead seems to be as extraordinary as their manners. The heroine, Alison, is half persuaded, half bullied, by her aunt, Lady Agatha Miles, into an engagement with a Scotchman, Sir Malcolm Roskeen, who strangely enough proposes to her the day after his return from the front, the worldly aunt having in the most transparent fashion left them together for this purpose. Then another of the clan Roskeen turns up, in the person of a raw, uncouth, lanky cousin, with whom Alison soon falls in love, mainly because he is so honest and frank, and shows such devotion for Sir Michael, who is apparently the head of his clan. However, she marries the baronet all the same. The ceremony over, she is hurried away by her husband in a hansom cab, her aunt, uncle, and the Highland kinsman regarding the strange proceedings from the dining-room window without making any effort to interfere or to take a more affectionate parting. Sir Michael, it speedily appears, is a man with a past—not entirely relinquished; and, what is still worse, he is not altogether right in his mind, evidence of which he forthwith proceeds to show to his terrified bride. The scene is next transferred to the family castle in Scotland, which is appropriately stately, but ill furnished. Here Alison is introduced to several of her husband's relatives who seem all to be tainted with the family weakness. There is also a strange French boy of the monkey variety, a grim hard-featured housekeeper, and other disagreeable surroundings, not forgetting the usual wing of the castle which is carefully shut off and yet appears to be inhabited. Of life in Scotland a complete travesty is given. Miss Warden's latest work will certainly not add to her reputation as a novelist. It has evidently been very hastily put together and written, and apart from faulty construction stands greatly in need of literary revision. Educated people, for instance, do not talk in refined society about giving their servants 'the sack.'

From Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.—'A Chase round the World, the Following-up of a Chain of Mystery,' by Robert Overton. The mystery in this case arises out of the failure of the 'London Industrial Bank.' There are three managing directors to the bank, Mr. Casselden, Mr. Gregory Purdyke, and Mr. George Pardoe, and at the opening of the story there is a 'run' upon the firm. Steps have been taken, however, to meet this, when it is ascertained that Mr. Purdyke has absconded with one hundred thousand pounds. Casselden sets out in hot pursuit, the culprit having been traced to Southampton, where he is about to sail for Australia on the Cameroon; and Mr. Pardoe is left in sole charge. Unfortunately, immediately after his partner's departure, this gentleman meets with a cab accident in Cheapside, and is killed. The aspect the affair now presents is that both Casselden and Purdyke have bolted, more especially as the latter is unable to explain the real state of the case, having apparently been drowned at sea while following the Cameroon across the English Channel. The story then resolves itself into an account of the pursuit of Gregory Purdyke, and a most exciting pursuit it turns out to be, for he is as adroit and slippery in his actions as it is possible for a man to be, and he leads his pursuers into all sorts of strange places. What the eventual result is it would hardly be fair to disclose, seeing that the reader will derive so much pleasure from ascertaining the facts for himself. Mr. Overton has written a thoroughly entertaining story, worthy of his best efforts, and his exciting narrative has been capitally illustrated by A. Munro.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Goddess: a Demon,' by Richard Marsh. We have read so many of Mr. Marsh's books of late, and they are all of so weird and gruesome a nature, that we have taken to wondering whether he ever goes to bed at night, but is not rather wrestling throughout the small hours with the terrifying creatures of his own imagination, whose doings he has taken upon himself to describe. 'The Goddess' well sustains the general average of his work. It is the story of a murder committed in a flat, a number of persons being suspected of complicity in the matter; and naturally the detection of the real culprit being left as a surprise to the last. Of course it need hardly be said that the customary detective officer looms large in the narrative, and that he acts as the detective officer of sensational fiction usually acts in such cases. The heroine is a beautiful actress who casually walks (by the somewhat unconventional way of the window) into a young man's bedroom during the night, her hands and cloak covered with blood. Even the most insatiate lover of horrors will admit that this is a good beginning, and we can assure him that other events of an equally agreeable character follow. We can recommend the book as a very excellent nightmare-producer for the elderly and timorous.

From the same.—'The Princess of Copper,' by Archibald Clavering Gunter. The author at the opening of this novel takes us into the very invigorating society of the mining community in the Rocky Mountains. Events which here transpire form a very satisfactory basis for the subsequent plot of the story, the scene being shifted to New York, where one of the miners has developed into a 'Copper Trust' potentate, the possessor of something like seventy-five millions in cash, and an income of a few millions a year. This hard-headed man of business is surrounded by as pretty a set of stock jobbers as could well be imagined; but in the end he shows that he has a warm corner in his heart for somebody, and the curtain is rung down on quite a charming domestic scene, the pathos of which, however, is a little unconvincing. There are a large number of characters in the story, and all are possessed of great vigour and life. An amusing picture is given of a masculine young widow who, after a somewhat appalling experience of the result of promenading New York streets alone, submissively resigns herself to the future control of a long-suffering lover. The story is bright and vivacious, but mainly relies on stirring incident for its attraction rather than analysis of life or character.

New Editions.—The cordial reception given to previous editions of 'Frederic Lord Leighton: an Illustrated Record of his Life and Work,' by Ernest Rhys, has encouraged Messrs. George Bell & Sons to hope that a re-issue in a smaller form may be appreciated. To the present edition a chapter on 'Lord Leighton's House in 1900,' by S. Pepys Cockerell, has been added. In other respects the volume differs but slightly from the second edition published in 1898. It is needless to say that it is a highly interesting work.—Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have again found occasion to reprint Mr. James Lane Allen's 'Summer in Arcady.' The constant demand for this novel is the best evidence of its success, and it is satisfactory to find that at a time when so much inferior fiction is placed on the market there are still readers who can appreciate honest, refined work which treats of matters as they actually are rather than as a disordered imagination would have them. We have also received from the same publishers the seventh edition, revised, of that valuable little book, 'A Guide to the Unprotected in Everyday Matters relating to Property and Income,' by A Banker's Daughter. The volume was first published so far back as 1863.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

FROM THE AUTUMN LIST OF MR. ANDREW MELROSE

NOW READY. Price One Shilling net.

JOHN RUSKIN: a Biographical Sketch.

By R. ED. PENGELLY

'An exceedingly interesting biographical sketch. . . . Main events. . . . skilfully described. . . . Really a marvel at a shilling.'—DUNDEE COURIER.

'A happy conception. . . . happily accomplished.'

EXPOSITORY TIMES.

'Will find a ready popularity among all who desire a well-written, carefully condensed account of the great critic's life and work. There are lessons to be learned from reading of Ruskin's writings outlined in this book, there are remarkable traits in the veteran's character that excite interest, and the complete story of his life will furnish food for reflection.'

DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

'A little book on Ruskin at once comprehensive and truly appreciative, telling all that needs to be told of personal detail and yet not losing sight of the principle, that it is Ruskin, the seer and teacher, in art and in life, that the world and its elect will continue to know and to cherish.'—DAILY FREE PRESS.

'Written in a very sympathetic and agreeable fashion, and tells the story of Ruskin's life very clearly and neatly. Both the man and the writer are successfully limned, the former especially so.'—GLOBE.

'It is decidedly interesting.'—GLASGOW HERALD.

'Written in an interesting style.—NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.

'A book which ought to be read . . . with great interest.'

CHRISTIAN MILLION.

V.C., K.P., G.C.B.: a Biographical Sketch. By HORACE G. GROSER, Author of 'The Kingdom of Manhood' &c.

'A well-written biography, likely to have a wide circulation'—EXPOSITORY TIMES.

'This little work, which is admirably written, contains a graphic description of the services of Lord Roberts from his earliest days up to the present time.'

JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL COLONIAL INSTITUTE.

'A handy little biography, unburdened by unnecessary technicalities, but written in an interesting style, which should appeal to both military and civilian tastes.'—BOOKMAN.

'An excellent epitome at a cheap price.'

STANDARD CHRISTIAN.

'Worth re-reading. . . . A rousing little book.'

JACKSON'S U.P. PENS

Specially adapted for Elegant and Rapid Writing, and for all Styles of Penmanship

THE great demand for these Pens has suggested the production of two extra kinds of the same size and shape as the No. 4 Corresponding Pen, which is such a general favourite. The New G Nib is characterised by a greater fineness and flexibility, so that for those who indulge in fine writing and for Shorthand Writers it will be found unsurpassed. The New J Pen, with a broad but still somewhat flexible point, is richly gilt, and is eminently adapted for large bold styles of Penmanship, being peculiarly suitable for Ladies, whether they write vertically or obliquely. No more durable and delightful pen need be desired.

A Sample Box, containing a Quarter Gross Assorted Pens, sent post-free on receipt of seven penny stamps.

'Unquestionably capital pens. . . . Beautifully soft and fluent writing pens.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.

Capt. JOSHUA SLOCUM

With 63 Illustrations.

Being a Personal Narrative of the Experiences of the Sloop 'Spray' on her Single-Handed Voyage of Forty-six Thousand Miles.

8vo. 325 pp. 8s. 6d. net.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD writes:

'I have been instructed, delighted, and filled with admiration and interest while perusing this week the account by Captain Joshua Slocum (published by Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co.) of his voyage round the world, single-handed, on board his little boat the "Spray." Everybody who loves the ocean, or likes to hear about it; everybody who sets high value upon gallant, fearless deeds; everybody who rejoices to see the triumphs of manhood over solitude, danger, and death itself, should and must read this wonderful story of resolute adventure. I do not hesitate to call it the most extraordinary book, in its way, ever published; and the adventure itself by far the most courageous, sustained, and successful enterprise of the kind ever undertaken by mortal man.'

THE BEST CHILDREN'S

Chromo Presentation Books of the Season

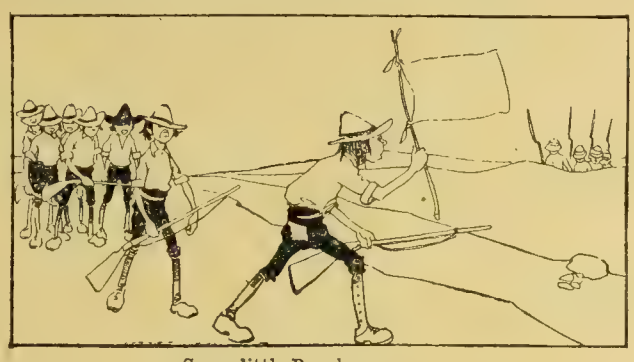
A SPLENDID SERIES

Size, royal 4to. (12½ × 9½ inches), handsomely bound in stiff picture boards. Cloth backs.

Price 3s. 6d. each.

Ten Little Boer Boys

A new version of an old tale. One of the smartest and most original Children's Books ever published. The verses are by 'NORMAN,' and are most cleverly and ably illustrated by exceedingly humorous sketches by A. S. FORREST. There is also music to each verse.



Seven little Boer boys,
Full of naughty tricks,
One abused the white flag,
And then there were s x.

The Pickletons

Told and Drawn by INGLES RHODE. This exceedingly clever and amusingly illustrated Story consists of twenty-four pages of Coloured Illustrations, which are masterpieces of Mr. INGLES RHODE'S art and humour.

The Gimcrack Jingle Alphabet

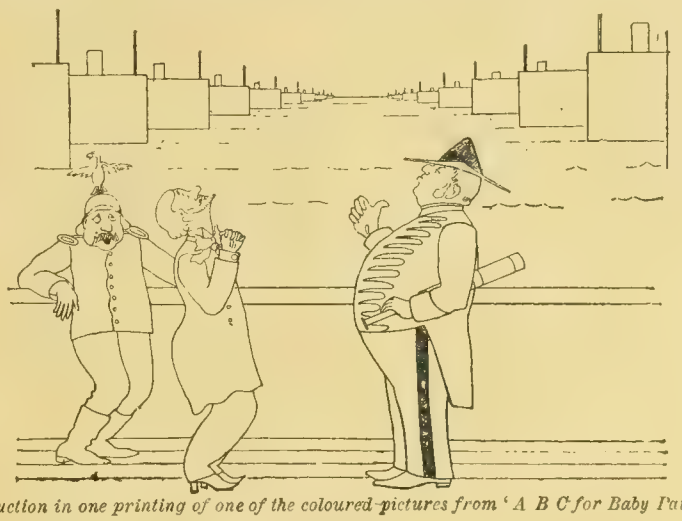
Drawn by INGLES RHODE, Author and Artist of 'The Pickletons.' Eminent art critics are of opinion that the Drawings in this book surpass even those of 'The Pickletons.'

A reduction in one printing of one of the coloured pictures from 'Gimcrack Jingle Alphabet.'

A very small boy with a yacht,
Said, 'Carry that thing I will not!'
See Jeames behind with the toy,
Whilst that rude little boy
In derision is shouting 'Wot rot!'

A B C for Baby Patriots

By Mrs. ERNEST AMES. This Alphabet is composed of amusing topical verses, ably illustrated by full-page Coloured Plates. These are as vivid in their colouring as they are most humorous in conception. The drawings are exceptionally clever and the verses exceedingly smart.



A reduction in one printing of one of the coloured pictures from 'A B C for Baby Patriots.'

N is the Navy
We keep at Spithead,
It 's a sight that makes foreigners
Wish they were dead.

Pictures for Little Englanders:

A Companion Book to Mrs. Ames' "A B C for Baby Patriots."

Verses by FRANK GREEN, and Pictures by A. S. FORREST. This book consists of amusing topical verses illustrated in a style which is Mr. FORREST'S own. It makes a splendid companion book to 'A B C for Baby Patriots.'

A reduction in one printing of one of the coloured pictures from 'Pictures for Little Englanders.'

In building railways, Johnny Bull
Is anything but a tyro:
He now is seeking to connect
The Cape of Good Hope to Cairo.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE CHILD:

A Study in the Evolution of Man

BY

Dr. ALEXANDER FRANCIS CHAMBERLAIN, M.A., Ph.D,

Lecturer on Anthropology in Clark University, Worcester, Mass.

The importance of the scientific study of children is rapidly becoming generally recognised. Dr. Chamberlain has for many years devoted himself to this study, and is recognised as one of the most learned and competent authorities on the subject. He approaches it with a full sense of its wide significance, and his book is an exhaustive summary of recent investigations.

FIFTEEN STUDIES IN BOOK-KEEPING. By WALTER W. SNAILUM, P.A.S.I. Crown 8vo. 3*s.* 6*d* net.

This book has been written to combine a thorough explanation of the principles of double-entry book-keeping with a course of work suitable for preparation for the examinations held by the Society of Arts, Civil Service, Lancashire and Cheshire Union of Institutes, and kindred examining bodies.

Part I., comprising the fifteen studies or lessons, examines thoroughly the principles of book-keeping and the form and use of the books and accounts kept by a merchant or trader. A series of exercises are given upon each study. The studies on Bills and Cheques are believed to give all the information thereon that is necessary for a trader to possess in the ordinary conduct of business.

The book may be used by young students, and an elementary course is marked out for that purpose.

Part II. is devoted to examination work. It contains seven examination papers (including those set by the Society of Arts in the years 1900, 1899, and 1898) fully worked as models. A selection of examination papers is also given for solution by the student.

The work is eminently adapted for use in the winter evening classes that are held to prepare for the spring examinations.

October 5, 1900.

When Messrs. T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh, brought out the first volume of their 'Dictionary of the Bible' it was evident to all who take an active interest in Biblical studies that the work was likely to prove one of rare excellence. The second volume confirmed the favourable impression produced by the first, and now the third appears to deepen our appreciation and our gratitude alike to the publishers and to the editors, Dr. Hastings and his efficient assistant, Mr. Selbie. The Dictionary, as explained in the original preface, is 'intended as a contribution towards furnishing the Church for the great work of teaching.' The present instalment brings the work down to 'Pleiades,' and it is safe to say that so far nothing that is of even remote or indirect value to the Biblical student has been omitted. That is negative praise. Of positive praise it would be difficult to give too much—that is, to say more than the work deserves. The articles, whether short or long, are models of what contributions to such a dictionary ought to be. We fancy that Dr. Hastings and his coadjutor are indebted for some editorial hints to that monument of editorial skill, 'The Dictionary of National Biography.' At any rate, the same admirable rule is observed in both, that nothing essential shall be missed and not a superfluous line admitted. As there is no verbiage, no wordy rhetoric in the stupendous work brought out under the direction of Mr. Leslie Stephen and Mr. Sidney Lee, so Dr. Hastings and Mr. Selbie have ruthlessly kept out unessentials, to the great gain of the reader.

It is modestly stated in the editorial preface that the Dictionary contains articles 'on all the persons and places that are mentioned in the Bible, on its archæology and antiquities, its ethnology, geology, and natural history, its theology and ethics, and on such words occurring in the Authorised or Revised Version as are now unintelligible or liable to misapprehension.' Moreover, much attention has been given to 'the language, literature, religion, and customs of the nations around Israel.' Hence the work is an encyclopædia of Biblical information presented by the foremost scholars of the time in their several departments. Thus to the present volume Dr. Margoliouth contributes the articles on the 'Language of the Old Testament' and the Apocrypha, while Dr. Thayer, of Harvard, writes the article 'The Language of the New Testament.' The New Testament itself is dealt with by Dr. McClymont, of Aberdeen, and the Old Tesment by Dr. Curtis, of Yale. Of the qualifications of these critics it is unnecessary to speak to anyone conversant with the latest developments of Biblical criticism. Professor Driver writes with his usual suggestiveness of 'Knowledge,' and Mr. Selbie in an admirably lucid manner of 'Lamentations.' The account of the 'Latin Versions of the Old Testament' is written by the Rev. H. A. A. Kennedy, and the papers on 'Law in the Old Testament' and 'Law in the New Testament' are from the pens of Dr. Driver and Dr. Denney respectively. The articles on 'Leprosy' and 'Medicine' are appropriately contributed by Professor Macalister, while Dr. Post, of the American College, Beyrout, deals with 'Levi.' Dr. Plummer, Master of University College, Durham, is responsible for the articles on 'The Lord's Prayer' and 'The Lord's Supper.'

One of the most important articles in the volume is that on 'Paul the Apostle,' by Professor Findlay, of Leeds. It runs to thirty-four pages, yet there is not a superfluous line nor a word wasted. Similar praise is due to the long articles on 'Peter (Simon)' and the 'First and Second Epistles of Peter,' by Dr. Chase, of Cambridge, to the account of 'Phœnicia,' by the Rev. G. W. Thatcher, Oxford, and of 'Palestine,' by Colonel Conder. The latter, indeed, is one of the best articles of its kind we have ever read. Other articles that deserve mention include 'The Gospel of Luke,' by Mr. Bebb, Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter; 'Gospel of Mark,' by Dr. Salmond; 'Gospel of Matthew,' by Dr. Bartlet, Oxford; 'Marriage,' by Dr. Paterson, Aberdeen; 'Miracle,' by Dr. Bernard, Dublin; 'Moses' and 'Moab and the Moabites,' by the Rev. W. H. Bennett; 'Nero,' by Dr. Cowan, Aberdeen; and 'Passover,' by Dr. Moulton, Yale. But indeed all the articles, long and short, are models of compression, and in accuracy and information are as thoroughly up to date as the best scholarship of the day can make them. In a word, this is the best Bible Dictionary now before the public.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Under the title of 'The Tale of a Field Hospital,' Messrs. Cassell & Co. are about to publish a book by Mr. Frederick Treves. The volume of course contains an account of Mr. Treves's experiences in South Africa.

Volume II. of the late Professor John Grote's 'Exploratio Philosophica' is announced by the Cambridge University Press under the editorship of Mr. Bickersteth Mayor. At the time of Professor Grote's death (1866) he had only the previous year issued the first part of this work, and the second was still unfinished. He left, however, a great quantity of manuscript, with instructions to his literary executors that they should publish or withhold what they thought proper. They have now decided to publish Volume II. of the 'Exploratio Philosophica,' accompanied by a re-issue of Volume I., which after the lapse of so many years will almost come upon the present generation as a new book.

The late Mr. T. E. Brown was in the opinion of excellent judges one of the poets who never obtain due recognition in their lifetime. Critics like Mr. Henley and Mr. A. T. Quiller-Couch have written of his work with enthusiasm, and the issue of his collected works by Messrs. Macmillan makes an appeal to the largest public. The best and most characteristic of his strong and homely work deals with the Isle of Man, his home and birthplace, and the tradition of narrative poetry, so much declined at present, is well maintained throughout the volume of seven hundred pages, which represents the labour of love steadily wrought at through a full lifetime.

Mr. William Tinsley, the once well-known publisher, is about to issue through Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. a volume of 'Random Recollections,' which, judging by the number of eminent people, literary, theatrical, and political, he has met on friendly terms during a long and busy life, should be particularly readable. But we hope the material will be better arranged than the reminiscences he gave us in his magazine some ten or twelve years ago.

The first edition of Captain Slocum's wonderful story of his cruise round the world was quickly sold out. Messrs.

Sampson Low, Marston & Co. will have another large supply ready in a few days. The reviews of the book, both in England and America, have been extremely favourable.

Many people outside the ranks of Churchmen will be sorry to learn that Dr. Bickersteth, the popular Bishop of Exeter, has resigned in consequence of ill health. Dr. Bickersteth, who is seventy-five, has had a long and busy career. For thirty years, 1855 to 1885, he was Vicar of Christchurch, Hampstead. Then for a few months he was Dean of Gloucester, and succeeded the present Archbishop of Canterbury as Bishop of Exeter fifteen years ago. As a poet he is very widely known, his religious poem in twelve books, 'Yesterday, To-day, and For Ever,' published in 1866, having had an enormous circulation on both sides of the Atlantic. His 'Hymnal Companion,' published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. has also had a sale of several million copies. The late Edward Bickersteth, Missionary Bishop of Tokyo, whose biography by his brother, the Vicar of Lewisham, was recently published by the same house, was his eldest son. Another son, Mr. R. Bickersteth, is a director of the firm of Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

The next volume in Mr. Fisher Unwin's 'Masters of Medicine' series will be contributed by Mr. J. F. Payne, and will have the famous physician Thomas Sydenham for its subject.

'Scotland since 1745' is the attractive title of a new work which Sir Henry Craik, the secretary to the Scottish Educational Department, has nearly completed. It will be a record of the great social and educational progress of Scotland during the eighteenth century rather than a political history, and will run to two volumes.

It will be good news to all boys and most men that Messrs. Macmillan are re-issuing in a very attractive form the famous 'Leatherstocking' stories of Fenimore Cooper. The series begins with 'The Last of the Mohicans,' which is illustrated with pictures by Mr. H. M. Brock, and prefaced by an introduction in which Mr. Mowbray Morris outlines the facts of Cooper's life, and writes a critical eulogy of his merits in adventurous romance.

Her Majesty the Queen has accepted a copy of Dr. Farrelly's new work on 'The Settlement of the War in South Africa.'

Mr. George Allen will shortly publish the following new novels: 'A Boer of To-day,' a novel, by George Cossins; 'A Tragedy of Errors,' by Geraldine Hodgson; 'Judith, a Tale of the Welsh Mining Valleys,' by Joseph Keating; and 'Philippa,' a Romance,' by J. B. Patton.

In a note which appeared in our last issue concerning Mr. Kipling's new story, 'Kim of the Rishti,' it was stated that the tale runs to some 60,000 words. We learn on good authority that the book contains 100,000 words.

The 'Life of Lord Rosebery,' which has created so much interest in the pages of one of the popular magazines, is published this week by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. The writer is Miss Jane T. Stoddart. Miss Stoddart, who has been for some years past the able coadjutor of Dr. Robertson Nicoll in the conduct of the British Weekly, has been put in possession of special sources of information in writing her biography of Lord Rosebery. The biography is personal rather than political. It does not attempt in any way to compete with Hansard or with the various volumes of Lord Rosebery's speeches which have been issued from time to time. It is illustrated with some seventy pictures, and printed throughout on fine art paper.

Messrs. Methuen are now pushing forward their 'Little Library,' the issue of which, owing to various circumstances, has been from time to time delayed. Eleven or twelve volumes of this series will be published during the season, including Lord Tennyson's Early Poems and his 'Maud,' Cary's translation of Dante's 'Inferno,' Mrs. Gaskell's 'Cranford,' Kinglake's 'Eothen,' Thackeray's 'Pendennis,' Jane Austen's 'Pride and Prejudice,' and Mrs. Craik's 'John Halifax.' These little books are all edited, with introductions and notes, by well-known writers, and each volume is provided with a photogravure frontispiece.

'The Far East, its History and its Questions,' is the title of a new work by Mr. Alexis Krausse, author of 'Russia in Asia' and 'China in Decay,' which Mr. Grant Richards will publish on the 9th. 'The aim of the present volume,' says the author, 'is to afford in handy form a complete account of the history of the countries of the Far East in so far as they have come into contact with Western civilisation.' In the second portion of his book he has attempted 'an examination of the existing factors in the Far Eastern question, and endeavoured to weigh the evidence available with a view to forming an estimate of the probable future.' The volume contains eight maps and five plans, all of which have been prepared specially to illustrate Mr. Krausse's work.

'The Mystery of Ladyplace' is the title of Christian Lys' new story. It is a story of to-day, and the scene is laid on the banks of the Upper Thames. The novel will shortly be published by Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.

Mr. Frank Murray, Derby, is publishing 'A Bibliography of Austin Dobson,' by Francis Edwin Murray.

After an interval of nineteen years, the Church Congress has again been held at Newcastle-on-Tyne. It was perhaps rather unfortunate that it took place amid the distraction of a General Election, but that fact had probably very little effect on the attendance of Church people. In connection with the Congress, an interesting Publishers' Exhibition was opened by the Bishop of Newcastle on Saturday, September 22, at the St. George's Drill Hall. The Exhibition was kept open until Friday, September 28. It was, as usual, divided into two parts, the trade or general section and the loan collection. In the former were to be found the exhibits of the leading Church publishers, with one or two notable exceptions. Among the publishing houses represented may be mentioned the Oxford and Cambridge University Presses, Bemrose & Sons, British and Foreign Bible Society, The Religious Tract Society, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, William Clowes & Sons, Hodder & Stoughton, Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., The National Society, Nelson & Sons, Nisbet & Co., Spottiswoode & Co., Eyre & Spottiswoode, and The Woodbury Permanent Photographic Printing Co.

The directors of Messrs. G. W. Bacon & Co. have declared their usual interim dividend for the half-year ended June 30 at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, free of income tax.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott announce for immediate publication a cheap edition of the 'Life of D. L. Moody,' by his son, W. R. Moody; a fresh addition to the series of 'Scripture Biography,' by Rev. F. B. Meyer, entitled 'John the Baptist'; and a volume entitled 'Pandita Ramabai,' describing the important work for the child-widows of India carried on by the lady whose name it bears. It is written by Mrs. H. S. Dyer, for many years resident in Bombay.

At the beginning of the war, poets and poetasters poured forth rhyme about the glories of the military life. In the new number of the Nineteenth Century Mrs. Birchenough declares we have no real war poet, and are sadly in need of one. She admits that the cash result in the case of the 'Absent-Minded Beggar' was such as to silence criticism. Poetry, she adds unkindly, has nothing to say in the matter. Mr. Kipling and Mr. Henley were both led astray, and where they blundered nothing better could be expected of the rank and file of rhymesters. She contrasts the later effusions with the poems inspired by the Crimean war, published by Sir Franklin Lushington and his brother in 1854, to the disadvantage of our latter-day poets. Her article is capitally written. By the way, the Lushington poems would be well worth reprinting at a time when the military fever is so strong. An exceedingly piquant article in the same number is 'A Nation of Amateurs,' by the Hon. George C. Brodrick, Warden of Merton. It is a case of slashing all round, and slashing with vigour. Lady Wimborne very appropriately deals with 'Ritualism and the General Election,' while Lady Sophia Palmer writes suggestively on 'Petitions and Electioneering Pledges.' Sir Henry Blake, Governor of Hong Kong, contributes 'Notes and Impressions of a Tour in China' which have a timely interest. Mr. Oswald Crawfurd writes an appreciation of Nietzsche, and Sir Charles Elliott discusses in a lucid and instructive manner 'Extravagance and Economy in the London School Board.' Several miscellaneous articles help to make up a number of at least average interest.

The Cambridge University Press is publishing a collection of 'Songs of Modern Greece,' compiled by Mr. G. F. Abbott, with a dedication to Professor Jebb. The volume is mainly intended for classical scholars, but it is hoped will have interest for lovers of folk-lore generally. The editor's purpose has been to exclude any poems previously published in Western Europe.

There has been a change in the firm of Messrs. Andrew Stevenson & Co., Booksellers and Publishers, 9 N. Bank Street, Edinburgh. The partnership has been dissolved by mutual consent, and Mr. Spence, one of the partners, has opened premises, Nos. 10, 11, 12, and 13 Waverley Market, Edinburgh. Mr. Spence has a wide connection in and about Edinburgh, having long been connected also with Messrs. Macniven & Wallace there. To the branches of bookseller and publisher he has added that of stationery.

Mr. John Hogg has in the press a work entitled 'Britain's Greatness Foretold: the Story of Boadicea, the British Warrior-Queen,' by Marie Trevelyan. This contains a remarkable prediction by Arianrod, the Arch-Druid in the time of Boadicea, which formed the subject of an Ode by Cowper. The book will have an introduction by Edwin Collins, 'The Consummation of the Prediction,' dealing with recent events of patriotic interest, and showing how the greatness of the British Empire has culminated during the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

Mr. John Long has ready for immediate publication Fergus Hume's new story, 'A Traitor in London.' It treats of the present Boer war.

To the October number of Macmillan's Magazine Mr. J. C. Tarver contributes an article on the recently published correspondence of Thomas Edward Brown, the author of 'Fo'cs'le Yarns,' which, though ostensibly a review of the letters, is really a portrait of the poet. It is excellent reading, drawn by a friendly yet discriminating hand, and gives a vivid and lifelike presentment of a man with keen susceptibilities and an immense enjoyment of life. In the same number Mr. F. Thorold Dickson, in 'Some Aspects of a Chinaman,' has had the courage to say a good word for the 'frugal, industrious, patient Chinaman of the masses.' Colonel Verner's article on the Rifle Brigade, 'A Century of Fighting,' tells the story of a regiment that, since 1800, has been always in the front of the English fighting line. 'A Solution of the Domestic Problem, by A Grandmother,' is a wholesome antidote to Mrs. Major's article in the August number, written with humour and common-sense. There is a paper on 'Social Life in Italy' that shows knowledge and sympathy, and two short stories, 'The Ranee and the Fortune Teller,' a somewhat grim illustration of life in an Eastern palace, and 'Mariki,' a well-written and pathetic sketch of a Breton peasant woman.

Mr. E. V. Lucas as a writer of verses and Mr. F. D. Bedford as artist have again collaborated in the production of a book for children, a large oblong with twenty-four coloured plates, a successor to their similar volume, 'A Book of Shops.' It is entitled 'Four and Twenty Toilers,' and will be published by Mr. Grant Richards.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ames, the authors of 'An A B C for Baby Patriots,' are publishing through Mr. Grant Richards a colour book for children under the title of 'The Tremendous Twins; or, How the Boers were Beaten.'

A new book by Miss Ethel F. Heddle, entitled 'Colina's Island,' will be published immediately by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. The same publishers announce a new book by Adelaide M. Cameron, author of 'Among the Heather,' entitled 'School-days and Holidays,' in which one of a family of five girls, daughters of a London doctor, describes their schooldays in London and their holiday adventures in the Highlands of Scotland.

'The Filibusters' is the title of a new story of adventure by Mr. Cutcliffe Hyne, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately a story by Ambrose Pratt, a new Australian writer, under the title of 'King of the Rocks,' the 'Rocks' being a society of Sydney roughs and the hero of the story their leader.

Her Majesty the Queen has written to Captain Adams, through Captain Ponsonby, thanking him for the specially bound copy of his poem which he sent her through Sir Arthur Bigge. 'Rus Divinum,' which Mr. Fisher Unwin has just published, is a Nature Cycle—a Song of Sun and Breeze, in which familiar Nature is the source of inspiration.

In addition to the works already announced, Messrs. Bemrose & Sons have in preparation a story by 'F. A. D.' entitled 'The Pharaohs of the West.'

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

Thomas Carlyle wrote in his Craigenputtock Diary, embodied in Froude's biography, 'Read Novalis's "Schriften" for the second time . . . and wrote a review of them. A strange, mystic, unfathomable book, but full of matter for most earnest meditation.' Carlyle often quoted Novalis, and notably in a letter to his brother, Dr. John Carlyle, on the occasion of their father's death. In 'Heinrich von Ofterdingen,' which he did not live to complete, Novalis proved himself the forerunner of the romance writers of recent years. His own life was a tragedy; for, suffering from an incurable illness, he felt himself condemned to an early death and to leave his work unfinished. The interest once taken in Novalis and his writings has revived of late, and a new critical edition of his works is announced with the title 'Novalis' Schriften: Kritische Neuausgabe auf Grund des handschriftlichen Nachlass,' von Ernst Heilborn, in two volumes. It will be issued by Georg Reimer, Berlin, the publisher of Heilborn's 'Novalis der Romantiker.'

The well-known firm B. G. Teubner, of Leipzig, will publish on October 15 the first part of 'Thesaurus Linguæ Latinæ,' an exhaustive Latin dictionary which has been prepared by the five German Academies of Berlin, Göttingen, Leipzig, Munich, and Vienna. It is claimed for this great undertaking that not only does it surpass all earlier Latin dictionaries in its extent and scientific character, but especially in respect of later Latin down to the sixth century. Six or seven parts will appear yearly, and it is confidently expected that the entire work, forming twelve volumes, will be completed in fifteen years.

'Jugenderinnerungen und Bekenntnisse' is the title of a volume of recollections and youthful confessions by the popular novelist Paul Heyse, which Wilhelm Hertz, Berlin, promises for October. Its contents include the author's narrative of his school and college life at Berlin and Bonn, a year's residence in Italy, King Max of Bavaria and old Munich, old and new literature in Munich, novel writing, theatrical relations, &c., &c.

One of the pioneers and leaders of parliamentary government in Germany during the half-century now drawing to a close was Eduard von Simson, who died a nonagenarian only last year; and who, after having been President of the German National Assembly in the revolutionary year 1848, lived to preside over the Reichsgericht of the new German Empire. His son, Professor B. von Simson, of the University of Freiburg in the Breisgau, has written a picturesque recital of the chequered career of President Simson, which will be published this month by S. Hirzel, Leipzig, as 'Eduard von Simson: Erinnerungen aus seinem Leben, zusammengestellt von B. von Simson.'

An unpublished work of Alphonse Daudet is announced by Ernest Flammarion, under the title 'Premier Voyage, premier Mensonge: Souvenirs de mon Enfance.' It will be illustrated by Bigot-Valentine. The same publisher also promises for October a new volume by Georges d'Esparbès, called 'Le Roi,' for which Maurice Barrès has written a preface; and, in the collection of 'Auteurs Gais, Chansons Gauloises,' by Octave Pradels, with illustrations by José Roy, and 'Telles qu'on les aime,' by Xanrof, with designs by Lourdey.

'La Ténébreuse,' the new romance by Georges Ohnet, will be published on October 16 by Paul Ollendorff. The same publisher promises for October 23 a hitherto unpublished humorous novel by Guy de Maupassant, entitled 'Les Dimanches d'un Bourgeois de Paris,' with numerous clever illustrations by a new book illustrator, Georges Depuis; and an illustrated edition of Octave Mirbeau's powerful romance, 'Le Calvaire,' with illustrations by Jeanniot.

Felix Dahn—whose historical romance 'Ein Kampf um Rom' was so great a success in other countries, and translations as well as in Germany, where twenty-nine editions of the original have been published—has been engaged during the last ten years with the investigation of the life and character of Charlemagne for his work, 'Kings of the Germans.' 'I began,' he says in that work ('Königen der Germanen'), 'by hating him; I soon learned to admire him, and ended by loving him.' With these impressions fresh in his mind Felix Dahn has written four short stories of life at the Court of Charles the Great, who forms a central figure in these tales, each of which, however, is complete in itself. The title of the volume is 'Am Hof Herrn Karls,' and the firm Breitkopf & Härtel, Leipzig, publish it.

One of the most interesting and valuable of the illustrated publications in the Paris Exhibition is without doubt the 'Musaici Christiani e Saggi dei pavimenti delle Chiese di Roma anteriori al secolo XV,' forming No. 79 of the Italian Section, Group 3, Class 13, and exhibited by its publisher, Signor Guglielmo Haass, of the well-known Libreria Spithoever, in the Piazza di Spagna. The work was projected by Pope Pius IX., who, wishing to reproduce in chromo-lithography the monuments of the first centuries of Christianity, entrusted the editing of the publication to the distinguished antiquarian, Commendatore Rossi, and transferred to Rome the artistic studio founded at Venice by Fra Ignazio Mozzoni, of the Friars of St. John, for the execution of the chronological tables, and himself undertook to defray the expenses of what was called the Pontifical chromo-lithographic establishment. The work appeared in twenty-seven parts, the first of which was published in June 1872, but owing to the political events of 1870-71, the deaths of Rossi and his successor in the editorship, Enrico Stevenson, the publication was not completed until October last year. The text is given in French as well as Italian, and forms three volumes.

INFLUENCE OF LITERATURE ON LIFE.

The influence exercised by literature, or at any rate dramatic literature, on men's lives is strangely shown in the following excerpt from a recently published volume of memoirs by M. Denormandie, Member of the French Senate, entitled 'Temps passé, Jours présents.' It may be stated that M. Denormandie assiduously frequents the theatre. 'Everyone remembers the piece by Bayard, "Un Ménage Parisien." Well, some days after its first performance the mayor of an arrondissement of Paris, which at that time happened to be the second, was surprised by the entry of a visitor in a great state of excitement, who made the following declaration: "I occupy the falsest possible position in Parisian society; my home life is not what it ought to be, but nobody suspects it; that last piece at the Théâtre-Français has brought about a revolution. We want, M. Mayor, Madame and I, to settle our position (régulariser notre situation), for the life we lead is a perfect torture. I have come to ask a great favour of you, that you will marry us as secretly as possible, and will simplify all the formalities to be gone through." Shortly afterwards the two persons contracted marriage. I had the story from the mayor himself, who presided at their union. This may be called a real triumph for the dramatic author.'

The same author tells an amusing story of the well-known Baron Taylor, who, when ninety years of age, called on M. Perrin, then director of the Théâtre-Français, to thank him for some act of kindness, which he did in the warmest terms. M. Perrin expressed his regret that the Baron should have troubled to call. The Baron continued to pour out his thanks. 'But,' said M. Perrin, 'you must not say any more, you must say that when I am buried!' 'Then,' said Baron Taylor, with energy and conviction, 'then I will say it!' Shortly afterwards he died.

SALARIES OF BOOKSELLERS' ASSISTANTS, HERE AND ELSEWHERE.

A letter on the subject of the pay of booksellers' assistants appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of September 22, suggested, the writer says, by a leader in the issue of August 18. In considering the question of salaries, and, indeed, of incomes in general, the changes of the past half-century or so must be taken into account. At the present day few booksellers or their assistants reside at their places of business, and there are business people who have lived for years in a neighbourhood where, although respected, their occupation was unknown, so that the suggestion of position to maintain is beside the mark. The writer, however, says: 'Our point is that the pay of capable men in the bookselling trade is exceedingly low,' &c., &c. Very little business experience, however, suffices to show that not always nor in every trade is it possible for knowledge and work to be equally and adequately remunerated; but that pay must depend on profits. And here the matter might well be dismissed if the letter-writer had not proceeded to 'confidently affirm that the best of booksellers' assistants find it worth their while, when it comes to settling down in life (or before), to turn their minds to fresh fields of employment, where the remuneration,' &c.

This solemn declaration may be justified by facts, but it may be affirmed with at least an equal degree of confidence that the same complaints with regard to pay and prospects are constantly heard from those engaged in other trades—and professions too, for that matter. Are bankers' and lawyers' clerks and medical assistants, or even the unbeneficed clergy, always satisfied with their stipends; or, when at length they are their own masters and have a poor practice or living, are they contented with the positions they had so longed for? It is gratifying to know that, at least in 'Alpe's' belief, 'a change for the better (in the book trade) is at hand'; and he proceeds to assure us that 'masters would wish to share the pecuniary benefits of the coming reform equally with their assistants who have also been partakers with them in the distress.' By 'the coming reform' he presumably means the net book system. Certainly under the threepence off the shilling system the bookseller can have but little to share with anybody. What the net system may enable him to do for himself or his assistants remains to be seen.

Everyone must sympathise with the bookseller's assistant, whose long hours of work and exacting duties are doubtless onerous. But it must not be supposed by neophytes in the book trade, who should strive to raise its character and their own at the same time, as faithful members of the trade, that there are no long hours and responsibilities to be borne in other trades; nor should they think lightly of abandoning the calling of a bookseller, of whom even stern old Frederick the Great said: 'Buchhandler ist ein honetter Titel.' Even in Germany—thought by many to be the Paradise of the book trade, where underselling must be unknown and profits large, and assistants' pay on a corresponding ratio—a different story might be told, and may be in a subsequent issue of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

AUTHORS AS POLITICIANS.

It is commonly taken for granted that a man of letters is pretty sure to score a failure if he venture into the dusty and noisy arena of politics. The Spectator, discussing this point in connection with the present election, remarks that 'the failure of the intellectual candidate is best accounted for by the phrase applied by one of the most distinguished literary politicians of the day to the case of Robespierre—"the unhappy doctrinaire immersed in the intricacy of practice." A man who has led the vita umbratilis, the cloistered life of the student, is,' our contemporary thinks, 'ill at ease when he exchanges his seclusion for the cockpit of contending factions.' But it will console some parliamentary candidates to learn that 'while the purely literary man seldom shines on the political platform, it by no means follows that those who live by their pen make bad candidates. On the contrary, we are inclined to think that the successful modern novelist enters on a political campaign with many positive advantages. He is almost of necessity a travelled personage, and his conscientious quest of local colour from China to Peru has probably implanted in him a sense of our Imperial responsibilities. He is pretty certain to have explored the slums, and to have made himself familiar with the various forms of philanthropic enterprise. Finance, "combines," "corners," company promotion—all come within his extensive view. The modern novelist, in short, is ex hypothesi omniscient; having largely usurped the function of the dramatist, the preacher, the pamphleteer, and the historian, he is bound to know a good deal about everything, from metaphysics and the higher criticism to the manufacture of tin-tacks or the methods of pilchard fishing. Take the question of the housing of the poor, and where could you find a better expert than Mr. Arthur Morrison? Or if agricultural depression were the theme of discussion, who would be better fitted to serve on a Committee than Mr. Rider Haggard? Outside the ranks of trained engineers, who would be better equipped to assist the inquiry into the efficiency of machinery—say water-tube boilers—than Mr. Kipling? Lastly, for sane, stimulating, and businesslike criticism of our military system, where can we look even among Service Members for a better and sounder critic than Dr. Conan Doyle? We are very far from contending that the ability to produce a popular novel is a guarantee of parliamentary capacity. But we assert without fear of contradiction that the preparation involved in the writing of a serious novel dealing with the social problems of the hour constitutes a far better claim to the confidence of the electorate than the equipment of the company promoter or the professional politician.' This is encouraging if at the same time a trifle patronising. The Spectator says nothing of Lord Beaconsfield, who was at once an eminently successful politician and a distinguished man of letters. Mr. Morley is another case in point. Mr. Lecky is a member of Parliament, but he remains the simple man of letters.

THE HOME OF TOLSTOY.

At last something which at home would be called a village green, and two little white-washed towers, forming the end of an avenue of old birches. This is Count Tolstoy's famous place—not, by the way, that he is 'Graf Tolstoy' to anybody hereabouts, as I found when I hired the carriage. He is just 'Lef Nikolaievitch,' Leo, the son of Nicholas. The birches are hoary as is their master's head, and great in stature even as himself, and their way winds upward, past an exquisite willow grove by a lake, till it brings you in sight of a white, low-spreading château, with roof painted green, like almost all roofs in Russia, close set round with trees.

Tolstoy works in his room till one o'clock, and nothing is ever allowed by his devoted family to disturb him. Miss Tolstoy, a woman whom it is a privilege to have met even for so short a time, takes us round the farm. It is not like the farms of England, still less like the West; it resembles more the neglected homesteads of New England. The tillage is of the roughest; two ploughs by the barn door might have been fashioned by Tubal Cain; there is no stored wealth in a yellow stackyard; the fields are deserted. No landowner can live by his land, Miss Tolstoy assures me, and estate by estate is passing out of the hands of those who inherited it from a long line of ancestors into the possession of the rich merchants and manufacturers of the city, who are careless as to produce and seek only the social prestige that land alone gives in old countries. She is pessimistic this morning, for she goes on to say that even of these the third generation is always ruined, and has to begin again. 'No Russian,' she avers, 'ever "founds a family," as you say. A man makes a fortune, his son lavishes it, his grandson disperses it.' I suggest modern agricultural machinery, pedigree crops and stock, chemical fertilisers. She shakes her head —'It would never pay here.' In his youth Tolstoy was a mad sportsman, from dawn to nightfall in the saddle, or with gun and hound. Here he comes, walking sturdily down the narrow woodway, his dogs leaping joyously about him.—From 'Russia of To-day,' by Henry Norman, in the October Scribner's.

IN MEMORIAM.

Professor Thomas Davidson.

The death is announced of Professor Thomas Davidson, the distinguished scholar, who died at Montreal on the 14th ult. Professor Davidson was a graduate of Aberdeen University, and was the author of many works, chiefly educational. They included: 'The Parthenon Friezes' and 'The Place of Art in Education,' 'Aristotle and Ancient and Modern Educational Ideals,' and the 'Education of the Greek People and its Influence on Civilisation.' Professor Davidson contributed to nearly all the leading American, English, and Continental reviews.

The Rev. Harry Jones.

Readers of religious literature, and especially of religious magazines, will learn with deep regret of the death of Prebendary Harry Jones, which took place at Barton Mere, Pakenham, on Sunday morning. On Wednesday last he was seized with paralysis, from which he never recovered. He was a contributor to several well-known magazines, and in the course of his long life came into intimate relations with several distinguished men of letters, including Mathew Arnold, Dean Stanley, and Bishop Fraser. He graduated at St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1846, was ordained deacon in 1848 and priest in 1849. His first curacy was at Great Baddow, Essex, and after two years as curate of Drinkstone, Suffolk, he came to London in 1852 as curate of St. Mark, North Audley Street. After five years' work there he was presented to the vicarage of St. Luke, Berwick Street. There he laboured assiduously for twelve years, and in 1873 the Bishop of London (Dr. Jackson) appointed him to the important rectory of St. George-in-the-East, where he was very popular with the people, and the Bishop of Manchester (Dr. Fraser), who had so high an opinion of him, frequently occupied the pulpit. In 1882 he took the vicarage of Great Barton, Suffolk, a county in which he had property. While there he was Select Preacher before the University of Cambridge. In 1885, being tired of country life, he returned to London, and Prebendary Kempe appointed him to the vicarage of St. Peter, Great Windmill Street, and the incumbency of St. Philip's Chapel, Regent Street.

From 'The Living Races of Mankind'

'THE LIVING RACES OF MANKIND.'

Among the announcements of Messrs. Hutchinson's publications made in our last number appeared 'The Living Races of Mankind,' with 600 illustrations. This is a book of unique interest and importance, a work, too, which has involved a vast amount of labour and capital. Some particulars regarding it will doubtless be welcomed by readers of the Publishers' Circular. The following information was courteously supplied by Mr. G. Thompson Hutchinson, the publisher.

Mr. Hutchinson was extremely busy with the details connected with the publication of the first number (not to mention the numerous other books which he is bringing out this autumn) when our representative called, but he kindly granted an interview.

I was shown, writes our representative, several advance copies of future numbers, and can assure your readers that the specimen copy which is already made public is not in any way specially 'made up' with a view to effect. Indeed, what struck me most in the numbers I saw was the wonderful uniformity of excellence throughout, the subsequent numbers improving rather than otherwise. Very great care has evidently been taken in printing the book, and it would scarcely be too much to say that when complete the work will be typographically as nearly perfect as possible. I was told that the printers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, had never taken more pains over any book they have ever printed than over this, and that is saying much.

Of course I had not time to read carefully the text, but if that is as good as the printing and illustrations I told Mr. Hutchinson he might well be proud of his new venture. 'I do not think,' he said, 'that I need have any fear on that score. The author and his collaborators are all experienced men in their respective lines, and in addition to that they have received most valuable help from many other well-known ethnologists. I hope you will especially mention Professor Krant's name in this connection; he has taken the utmost interest in the preparation of the work, and it is in a very large measure due to his kindly advice that I can claim a double record for the book—perfect illustrations and reliable text.'

So I left Mr. Hutchinson, wondering how it was possible to produce such an elaborate work at such a low price.

The first part of 'The Living Races of Mankind' will be published on October 8, and further parts will appear regularly every fortnight, price 7*d*. each, complete in eighteen parts.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'A History of Education,' by Thomas Davidson. This is a treatise on education from the evolutionist's point of view. The endeavour has been to present the subject as the last and highest form of evolution—to show 'what it is that evolves, why it evolves, and why evolution, finally attaining to consciousness, becomes education.' The volume is divided into two parts, respectively treating of savage, barbarian, and civic education, and human education, the latter being again sub-divided into the topics of the supernatural beginnings of humanism, mediæval education, and modern education. Mr. Davidson has evidently devoted no ordinary attention to his subject, and he carefully builds up his treatise in a way that denotes painstaking labour and research. Some of his observations are particularly interesting. The chapters on barbarian and civic education may be mentioned as cases in point, though the main attraction of the volume will naturally rest on the later portion, which deals with modern education, tracing its gradual growth through the fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries down to the present time. The book is primarily written for American readers, but is certain to attract considerable attention on this side of the Atlantic.

From the same.—'The Mind of Tennyson: his Thoughts of God, Freedom and Immortality,' by E. Herstrey Sneath, Ph.D. Tennyson, as the author of this new volume well observes, was a poet with a distinct aim. He had a message to deliver to humanity, which he deemed to be of vital importance. It is right therefore that we should arrive at a just appreciation of his work, its bearing on human life and conduct; and it is to this object that Professor Sneath devotes himself. The work is the thoughtful, carefully considered outcome of a well-balanced mind, anxious to adjust the scales of literary criticism with unimpeachable fairness. We do not say that we altogether agree with some of the author's conclusions, but his desire to arrive at a just interpretation is beyond question. The book should be very interesting to students and admirers of Tennyson.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'A Breaker of Laws,' by W. Pett Ridge. Poaching, they say, runs in families, and is exceedingly difficult to cure a man of; thieving, it would seem, judging from this story, is an equally fascinating pursuit, not easily relinquished when once thoroughly cultivated. Alfred Bateson, the humble individual whose exploits furnish a title for the book, is an expert master of the craft, and he finds it indeed hard, even when animated by his love for a good and pretty housemaid, to turn over a fresh leaf. He manages to keep straight for a time, then makes a slip, regains the right path, and again goes astray; his entire life is a struggle between good and bad impulses. Even when interviewing one of the partners in a large business house with whom he hopes to get honest employment, he cannot refrain from pocketing a gold-mounted paper cutter, and it is with the utmost regret that he throws his much beloved 'jemmies' away, being constrained to retain the last as a memento. But throughout the narrative his great love for his wife is his redeeming point. Eventually this leads him to an act of noble renunciation. There are many good characters in the book besides the breaker of laws. His staunch friend, William Finnis, a man of few words but incomparable fidelity, is depicted with capital effect, and his previous associates in crime, old Mrs. Fayres and the Ladd family, also present attributes of originality. The story as a whole possesses a quaint interest that is certain to render it a favourite with the public.

From Mr. John Long.—'Men of Marlowe's,' by Mrs. Henry Dudeney. This collection of stories, supposed to be the chronicles of several tenants in one of the old Inns off Holborn, will inspire the reader, if thoughtful, with a lazy wonder at the strange prevalence of Bohemian 'smartness' which distinguishes present-day fiction. There is a foolish affectation of unorthodox freedom in most of it, and a tendency to scoff at all rules and restrictions—even a steady income is in the present instance spoken of as a 'blight on originality'; to be interesting it is evidently necessary, in the opinion of the writer, that one should be careless, improvident, and an irregular liver. It need scarcely be pointed out that this is a very 'youthful' philosophy, likely only to attract the shallow-minded and inexperienced, but there can be no doubt that it has a very considerable following. Nor would we say that Mrs. Dudeney's stories, reflecting the free and easy life of the tenants of 'Marlowe's Inn,' are by any means uninteresting: it is only the under-current of manifest approval to which we take exception. As a matter of fact, the majority of the stories have a very obvious moral, seeing that a Bohemian existence leads most of the characters to a miserable ending. Mrs. Dudeney has illustrated the tragic side of life with some dexterity, but her book, although entertaining, leaves a somewhat unpleasant taste on the palate.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Vicar's Atonement,' by J. Harwood Panting. When two young lovers in fiction, such as the Vicar of Wynsdale and Lady Alice Glenby, make so many earnest protestations of each other's superiority, we may be quite sure that one at least of them is not so divine as appearances would indicate. And so it eventually proves in this story. The offence, however, that the Vicar has committed is of no very heinous nature. He has been married before, when a mere boy, to a designing woman below him in station who has since died. There is surely nothing here to keep back with such painful foreboding from the heavenly being who has now promised to be his wife. Still, it is needless to say the Vicar does not make the dread confession—else the story might never have been written—but tightly confines it within his own breast, where it proves anything but a pleasant occupant. Equally of course we anticipate that the Vicar's first wife is not really dead, but will presently turn up to torment the unintentional bigamist, possibly bearing the information of a child. All this duly takes place, and a murder follows. These are the earlier events of the story, and upon the basis thus formed the remainder of the narrative is constructed. Ultimately the Vicar is placed on his trial and found guilty of the murder of his first wife, but at the last moment the real culprit makes a full confession and the good man is restored to the bosom of his family. We are sorry to have little to say that is favourable of 'A Vicar's Atonement'; it is badly constructed, ill written, and exceedingly wordy.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'A Master of Craft,' by W. W. Jacobs. We have been reminded in reading Mr. Jacobs's work of a short story by the author of the 'Bab Ballads' which appeared in the first number of Mirth, a periodical founded by the late Henry J. Byron, many years ago. The plot of this story was founded on the ingenious efforts of a middle-aged bachelor to rid himself of the embarrassing attentions of his relatives, who were mightily anxious (seeing that he was a man of some property) to prevent his getting married. 'A Master of Craft' runs on somewhat similar lines. The leading character is a sea captain of an apparently exceedingly susceptible disposition, who is engaged to three women at the same time, and whose difficulty is to avoid being captured by two of the three, his actual affections being in charge of the third. His manœuvres and subterfuges in order to preserve his freedom are exceedingly comical, but not more so than those of his uncle, another sea captain, somewhat of the Bunsby type, who, having taken to himself a housekeeper, in order to facilitate his nephew's union with one of the two ladies whom that base deceiver doesn't desire to marry, finds himself in the position of being persecuted on his own account, and in vain attempts to escape the snares of the fowler. The game of hide and seek is admirably kept up throughout the narrative, and we can promise the reader many a hearty laugh. When the older sea-salt gets married, the crew of his schooner, to do honour to the occasion, adopt tall silk hats, and an exceedingly amusing picture is given of their appearance as they bashfully make their way out of the fo'castle: 'The mate was just talking to the fisherman about an uncle of his, who had commanded a brig, when his voice failed him, and he gazed open-mouthed at a stout seaman who had just come upon deck. On the stout seaman's face was the look of one who sees a vision many miles off; on the stout seaman's head was a high hat of antique pattern which had suffered in the brushing. To avoid the mate's eye he folded his arms, and leaning over the side gazed across the river. Words trembled on the mate's lips, but they died away in a squeak as a little top-hatted procession of three issued coyly from the forecastle, and, ranging itself beside Mr. Jones, helped him to look across the river.' It is needless to say that the hats, which were in various degrees of misfit, did not survive the festivities of the evening. One gentleman went to bed in his.

From the same.—'Wounds in the Rain: a Collection of Stories relating to the Spanish American War of 1898,' by Stephen Crane. These tales have all the stirring movement and intense pathos peculiar to their theme. How well the author can utilise the dramatic possibilities of warfare, the reader scarcely requires to be told. Here if not exactly at his best, he is very near to it. The stories are related with a terseness and dexterous arrangement of event that produces a sensation of the utmost realism. We seem actually to see the poor dying private who has been shot in the stomach and whose only sensation is that the ground upon which he is lying is very wet, while our eyes anxiously follow the movements of the brave young lieutenant whose first battlefield proves to be his last, killed, when wounded and defenceless, by a thrust from the machete. They do not altogether furnish cheerful reading, these stories, but their fidelity, vigour, and descriptive power are undoubted. Those who would know something of the horrors of war should certainly read this volume.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.—'The Infidel: a Story of the Great Revival,' by M. E. Braddon. The author has departed considerably from her usual lines in this novel, and it is curious to contrast the tone of this her latest work with that of her earlier volumes, such as 'Lady Audley's Secret' and 'Aurora Floyd.' The 'Infidel' is the daughter of a clever but disreputable literary hack in the days when George the Second was king. After the death of his wife he had eloped with a farmer's daughter in the Lincolnshire parish where he was curate in charge, and unfortunately was caught in possession of some two hundred pounds of her father's money, with which the pair had hoped to start a dairy farm in Jersey. For this offence he was sentenced to five years' imprisonment, besides being unfrocked. Thornton came out of the house of bondage 'a rank atheist, a scoffer at all things holy, a scorner of all men who called themselves Christians,' and it was in these views that he educated his beautiful daughter who helped him with his literary work. The character of Antonia Thornton is delineated with great skill, and it is not alone upon the personages of the novel that she will exercise her powerful attractions. Ultimately she inspires an elderly dissipated nobleman, Lord Kilrush, with an honourable affection, which he proves by making her his wife on his deathbed. By this marriage she comes into great property, though it proves the means of killing her father, whose enfeebled frame will not stand the high living into which he now plunges. After his death Lady Kilrush becomes a prominent personage in the beau monde and a leader of fashion. She one day makes the acquaintance of George Stobart, a near relative of her late husband, and an earnest disciple of John Wesley and Whitefield, whose preachings about this time are agitating all London. From this meeting ensue very important consequences. Eventually the 'Infidel,' after a long course of work among the poor and sick, prompted by the generosity of her nature rather than any humanising religious influences, becomes a true convert, and joins the Wesleyan community. We have been careful not to detail the circumstances that lead to this revulsion of feeling, because it might decrease the reader's interest in the work. It is a very interesting story, told with all Miss Braddon's well-known ability and excellent descriptive skill, and is certain to find favour with the reading world. A strange feature, perhaps, considering the author's previous work, is that it is in no way sensational; indeed, if anything, it would have been improved by greater briskness of action.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'The Isle of Unrest,' by Henry Seton Merriman. The island in question is Corsica, and the author has conveyed a very vivid impression of the bitter animosities distinguishing its inhabitants, using this as a background for the interesting story of a love attachment, without which it is well known any novel stands little chance of success. The hero of the narrative, Lory de Vasselot, is a tremendously fine fellow, gallant in bearing, courageous n action, and exceedingly handsome. It is certainly no wonder that the pretty Mademoiselle Denise Lange prefers him to her other suitor, the impassive and somewhat mysterious Colonel Gilbert, but of course difficulties come in the way, misapprehensions which could easily have been solved in five minutes spring up, and the usual entanglements that always have and always will mark the love affections of young people ensue. We cannot say that we think the story one of the best of Mr. Merriman's efforts, nor are we particularly struck by the way in which he brings the narrative to a conclusion, but it has many points of interest. Perhaps the most noticeable of these is the author's close observation of French character, as shown in certain shrewd comments. French women, for instance, 'are not only clever and more capable than French men, but they are cleverer and more capable than any other women in the world'; while 'a Frenchman is not nearly so artificial as the shallow British observer has been pleased to conclude—he is, in fact, much more a child of nature than either an Englishman or a German.'

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Speaker's Chair: its Origin, the Procedures Historically Associated with it, and Biographical Sketches of its most Notable Occupants,' by Edward Lummis. To judge from Mr. Lummis's volume, which is something of a disappointment, the Speakers in the House of Commons are not such an interesting body of men as our veneration for the office would lead us to imagine. Perhaps they carry the judicial calmness and gravity cultivated in the discharge of their high duties into their private lives, and so become incapable of any of those inconsistencies and amusing eccentricities which have at all times brightened the careers of the truly great, or it may be that Mr. Lummis has confined himself too closely to matters of fact, and has omitted the seasoning which should be dexterously added to every literary dish. Anyhow the book is a trifle wearisome and dull. It seems, however, to give a faithful account of the history of the Speaker's chair; and the list of the distinguished men who have at various times occupied it is undoubtedly interesting. A capital portrait of the present office-holder, the Right Hon. William Court Gully, is given as frontispiece.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'A Son of Austerity,' by George Knight. Much of this story is of a fanciful character, which we suspect will prove rather mystifying to the majority of readers, and possibly not particularly attractive. This is the part which refers to the queer little singing maid, Elsie Stuart, and her love for the uncouth, dwarf-like Scotchman, Allan Cary, whom her loss of sight will not permit her to recognise as he really is. But apart from this feature in the story there is a distinct thread of interest in the account of the Gotch family, the hard austere mother, the more easy-going repentant father, and the son of their unfortunate union. The last named has uttered his own accusation and vindication: 'I am a Gotch—the Gotches are an unlucky stock, too stern for love, too selfish not to demand it, too proud to take pity in its stead.' It is when Paul Gotch falls in love and gets married that the real interest of the story begins. His wife is not truly fond of him, and after their marriage she is persecuted by an old admirer, whom she thinks more highly of than he deserves. Eventually in her helplessness she runs away from home, leaving her husband and little baby boy. In London, where she takes refuge, she shares rooms with a vulgar, indolent young woman whom she has met in the train, and it is while tending her companion's neglected little baby that her thoughts first turn regretfully to the home and child she has renounced. The lesson is complete when, after some weeks spent in town, she discovers that the husband of her companion (who by this time has developed some very unlovely attributes) is none other than her old admirer, whom she left her home to avoid. This decides her; like a frightened deer, she rushes from the small flat and makes her way back to Paul Gotch, whose good qualities she now thoroughly appreciates; and with the happy reunion of husband and wife the story is brought to a conclusion. It is rather unequal in its character, but the later chapters are full of interest.

From Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.—'One Thousand Objects for the Microscope, with a few Hints on Mounting,' by M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D. In this new edition of a popular work, which contains five hundred figures and numerous woodcuts, the number of pages has been nearly doubled. The new matter takes the form of an Introductory Part, 'giving brief information respecting the microscope and its essential accessories, with hints on their manipulation, and on the collection and mounting of the different classes of objects described in Part II.' This addition just supplies that amount of practical teaching which was required to make previous editions of the book complete, and may be said to improve its general utility very greatly. It should be added that no attempt has been made to explain the scientific construction of the microscope, or to enter upon the many elaborate improvements which have been effected in the instrument within recent years, but 'simply to furnish a guide which may help the young student in his early acquaintance with the art and mystery of microscopy.' As such we can warmly commend the volume.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The World's Blackmail,' by Lucas Cleeve. The most prominent figure in this story is a resolute, hard-headed man who has made his 'pile' out in California, and has now settled down in London, with a simple uncultivated wife and a clever refined daughter, bent on making a name for himself. The character is not unknown in English fiction, but has been endowed in the present instance with certain elements of novelty. It is through the medium of politics that Lucas White hopes to achieve fame and reputation: but he is so honest in his nature that he refuses to have his independence bought by promises of power and place, or to allow his actions to be influenced by friendship or self-interest. This is what he calls the 'Blackmail of the World,' and to that blackmail he is resolved never to be a victim. It is perhaps hardly necessary to say that, manly as he is, he struggles in vain against the corruption surrounding him. But even when beaten to his knees, swindled and disgraced by the very members of the aristocracy in whom he has placed his confidence, he never loses heart; and having spent all his money, he calmly goes out to the colonies again, makes a fresh 'pile,' and returns to resume the fight. In this he has every prospect of being more successful; but the story now comes to a close. There are many clever character sketches in the book, notably Lord Tregall, who unscrupulously takes advantage of White's generous confidence to victimise him to the extent of several thousand pounds, and finally ends by forging his signature. George Austen, the authoress, is also good. The novel as a whole may be said to be considerably above the average, and will repay perusal.

From the same.—'A Self-made Countess: the Justification of a Husband,' by John Strange Winter. Those who desire a pleasant, easy-flowing story, which will agreeably brighten the tedium of an unoccupied evening without stirring the reader to any serious display of emotion, will find in Mrs. Stannard's new work a very suitable companion. The great attraction of the author's style is that there is no appearance of effort; the narrative proceeds smoothly and fluently, and might well have come to us over the familiar intermediary of a pair of knitting-needles. Occasionally this style has its weaknesses—it is liable to become slipshod; but we do not fancy that the majority of Mrs. Stannard's admirers are disposed to be sternly critical. 'A Self-made Countess' is the story of a young girl (one of a family of three sisters) who, carefully engineered by a practical mother, marries an Earl, and afterwards, not content with the mere title of Countess, determines to show her suitability for the position by earning honourable reputation on her own account. So with untiring energy she throws herself into the cause of charity, giving receptions, concerts, and other entertainments at her house, until her husband, finding himself very much neglected, ventures to expostulate, when she relinquishes the pursuit. However, another opportunity speedily occurs for her to enter upon a career of enterprise which shall not in any way involve her husband; and in this she is completely successful. Still we lay down the book with a suspicion that the Earl after all would have preferred a less ambitious wife.

THE SETTLEMENT AFTER THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA

By M. J. FARRELLY, LL.D.,

Barrister-at-Law, Advocate of the Supreme Court of Cape Colony.

Mr. SPENCER WILKINSON in the MORNING POST.—'The author's proposals bear the impress of much knowledge of the countries to be dealt with, and of careful and dispassionate thought. Their publication at the present time is most opportune, and they cannot fail to be of the greatest use to all who propose to take their part in the discussion of the subject.'

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some Hundreds of Out-of-Print Books are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The Publishers' Circular can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

IMPERIAL COMPETITION
IN
JACKSON'S DRAWING COPY BOOKS

This Competition is open to all pupils in public and private schools throughout the British Empire. There are eighteen superior prizes for both Junior and Senior pupils, and, in addition to nearly one hundred other prizes, Certificates of Merit will be awarded to those whose work deserves such recognition. Now that Drawing is a compulsory subject, the opportunity is afforded to pupils in Elementary Schools of winning valuable premiums with a minimum of labour, as there are only three pages of models to each book in the Series.

For Conditions and all Particulars of above Competition, apply to the Publishers.

PRESS OPINIONS.

'They cover a wide range—in marked contrast to the tame and ordinary drawing book. . . . Draughtsmen will welcome these bright and attractive copies.'—Journal of Education.

'An excellent series worthy of high commendation.'—Educational Times.

'A series of exceptional merit. . . . We know of no similar attempt to popularise high art.' Schoolmaster.

'An excellent and highly practical series . . . very comprehensive.' School Board Chronicle.

'Tastefully designed, chastely executed, in every respect excellent—eminently fitted to develop the artistic faculties.'—Educational News.

'Serve admirably as a relief from Code grinding. . . . Splendid course of drawing.' Teachers' Aid.

'Have seen nothing like them, can most confidently recommend them.' Civil Service Gazette.

'Must be productive of the best possible results.'—National Teacher.

'The series for artistic excellence or for cheapness has no superior.'—Children's Mistress.

'Should be seen by every Headmaster who makes drawing a subject in his school.' Literary World.

'Publishers' Circular' Christmas Number

The chief object of this Number is to give a complete summary of the Presentation Books of the Year, and thus afford a useful guide to purchasers in the choice of suitable volumes. It forms a most valuable aid to the Bookseller, and enables him, by circulating a few copies (with his own imprint) among his customers, to solicit very effectively their Christmas orders. As an Advertisement medium, therefore, it stands unrivalled.

This year our Christmas Number will be made even more attractive and representative than ever, and as it is very necessary, in order to advance the best interests of the Publishing Trade, that it should be issued in good time for Christmas purchasers, we would ask advertisers to send us their orders, with copy, as soon as possible, and in this way to help us in securing early publication. Books for review should be addressed to the Editor, and the parcel marked 'Christmas Number.'

THE CHILD:
A Study in the Evolution of Man

BY

Dr. ALEXANDER FRANCIS CHAMBERLAIN, M.A., Ph.D.,

Lecturer on Anthropology in Clark University, Worcester, Mass.

The importance of the scientific study of children is rapidly becoming generally recognised. Dr. Chamberlain has for many years devoted himself to this study, and is recognised as one of the most learned and competent authorities on the subject. He approaches it with a full sense of its wide significance, and his book is an exhaustive summary of recent investigations.

FAMOUS NOVELS OF THE SEA. One Guinea net the Set, complete in a case; Single Volume 3*s.* 6*d.*

1. THE TWO ADMIRALS. By J. F. COOPER.
2. THE GREEN HAND. By GEORGE CUPPLES.
3. TOM CRINGLE'S LOG. By MICHAEL SCOTT.
4. MIDSHIPMAN EASY. By Captain MARRYAT.
5. MOBY DICK. By HERMAN MELVILLE.
6. THE WRECK of the 'GROSVENOR.' By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

The STANDARD says :—'The novel of salt-water is an almost exclusively Anglo-Saxon product; and Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. have been happily inspired to publish a series of "Famous Novels of the Sea" in half a dozen volumes. This set includes, of necessity, the three classics of a generation when ships were still picturesque—the immortal "Mr. Midshipman Easy" of Captain Marryat, Michael Scott's "Tom Cringle's Log," and Fenimore Cooper's "Two Admirals." The three others are Herman Melville's excellent, but neglected, "Moby Dick," "The Green Hand," by George Cupples, and Mr. Clark Russell's ever-popular "Wreck of the 'Grosvenor.'" The volumes are clearly printed in good type, in addition to being prettily bound.'

NOW READY. 8vo., gilt top, 12*s.* 6*d.* net.

A SPECIAL EDITION, limited to 250 Copies, for England and America, printed on Van Gelder's Hand made Paper. The Illustrations in this Edition printed on thick Japanese paper. Price 6*s.* net. [Ready.

LEPCHA LAND; or, Six Weeks in the Sikhim Himalayas. By FLORENCE DONALDSON. With Photogravure Frontispiece, Map of Route, and 108 Illustrations. Demy 8vo., 10*s.* 6*d.* net. [Next Week.

In this account of what may best be described as a prolonged picnic in one of the byways of the Himalayas, the author has described a journey among new and interesting surroundings, undertaken just after a fresh awakening on the part of the Indian Government to the political importance of Sikhim. But during the past year there has been a renewal of the agitation against the influence of China, which so hampers the natural trade between Hindustan and Tibet. Current events, however, and the probable parcelling out of Chinese territory, are likely to open the floodgates of Western civilisation. But when this comes to pass, 'Lepcha Land' will be a misnomer, and another primitive, patriarchal and peace-loving people will have died out.

Ready November 1. A SUPERB WORK, large 4to., £3. 13*s.* 6*d.* net.

MASTERPIECES OF VAN DYCK. 50 Full-page Photogravures from the Most Celebrated Paintings of Van Dyck. October 12, 1900.

The fifth volume of Mr. Laird Clowes's history of 'The Royal Navy,' just published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., is for two reasons especially interesting. In the first place it covers a period that was more than ordinarily prolific of memorable actions, and in the second place it brings the events of naval history sufficiently near to our own time to enable us to gather lessons that may be useful in the renewed attention that is now being paid to both branches of the service. Mr. Clowes, who is personally responsible for the whole of this volume, Mr. H. W. Wilson being unable to contribute the record of the minor operations as originally arranged, well remarks that the twelve years here treated of—from 1803 to 1815—form the most interesting and important period that is open to the student of the British Navy. Firstly, it was a period of notable triumphs. 'It saw the exhaustion, by the steady force of sea power, of the greatest military organisation that the world has ever known; and it exhibited the influence of sea power under two different aspects'—at Trafalgar with all the quick directness of battle, and in the years that immediately followed, with the slow but persistent harassment of the allied forces which eventually resulted in the depletion of their colonies, commerce, wealth, and resources. Secondly, thanks to the efforts of St. Vincent and the subsequent reorganisation by Sir James Graham, it was a period of great reforms; and, thirdly, it was a time of peculiar danger, for never before had Great Britain been called upon to face so formidable a foe or to do battle under such doubtful conditions. All these facts Mr. Clowes emphasises in his history, and the truth of his statements is made abundantly clear.

The preface is principally devoted to a consideration of the battle of Trafalgar, and the causes that led to the British victory, and it certainly forms not the least interesting portion of the volume. Mr. Clowes points out that it would be well not to imagine, as so many people do, that we could at any time duplicate this success. Nor should we cherish the erroneous impression that Englishmen are, or were, braver than Frenchmen or Spaniards, and that we owe our naval successes to that cause. As a matter of fact, no greater bravery could have been exhibited than that of the allied forces at Trafalgar. 'Many of their ships, ere they surrendered, had lost nearly half their complements; and the nature and amount of the punishment that our enemies sustained before submitting would do credit to the most gallant and determined fighters who ever existed.' In the matter of foresight and strategy also our antagonists were quite equal to ourselves, and Nelson's tactics certainly came as no surprise to the enemy; neither were we in superior numbers. To what, then, do we owe our success? Mr. Clowes thinks that we had exceptional circumstances in our favour and that the personal element in Nelson counted for a great deal. His presence with a British fleet was worth half a dozen battleships. But even this forms only a partial solution of the problem. Probably a whole string of influencing factors lies at the bottom of the question, not the least powerful being the fact that whereas we were animated by common aspirations and allegiance, our foes were of two nationalities, 'temporarily brought together by political schemers, yet destined to be bitterly and genuinely hostile to one another within a brief three years of the day of the action.'

The volume perfectly bristles with names memorable in naval history. Nelson, Collingwood, Cochrane, Codrington, Exmouth, Pellew (we drop their titles in the feeling that it is by their surnames, free of all adornment, that the public know and reverence them), Hoste, Baker, Barry, Calder, Hood, Blackwood, and others, figure in these pages with engaging frequency. We should also mention the illustrations, which in a work of this description form a feature of no slight importance. These embrace photogravure plates, full-page illustrations, and illustrations in the text, numbering in all nearly eighty. The reproductions of engravings of old naval battles are especially interesting. In respect of general finish and production the work presents all the excellent attributes that have distinguished the previous volumes. Paper, printing, and binding are alike admirable, and deserve the warmest praise. We have seldom handled such a handsome book.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The articles on 'Paris of To-day' which Mr. Richard Whiteing contributed to the Century Magazine will be published in this country by Mr. John Murray. The volume is to be handsomely illustrated.

'Rose Island' is the attractive title of Mr. W. Clark Russell's new novel which will be published by Mr. Edward Arnold next week. Rose Island is not the name of a locality but of the heroine of the novel, and a delightful figure she makes amid the picturesque and dramatic situations such as the veteran novelist loves.

Mr. Macqueen has in preparation a book on the Transvaal Secret Service by 'One who was in it.' Some of the highest officials in the Transvaal are said to be compromised by these revelations. Another book shortly to be published by Mr. Macqueen is 'Anthony Delaval,' by Gertrude Hodgson, whose first book did very well with Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. are to publish as a species of picture volume a collection of the photographs taken by Mrs. Bishop when travelling in China. Many of these present features of great interest, being of typical scenes and little visited localities. They also throw considerable light on the dress and personal attributes of the people. Each photograph will be accompanied by a few words of description from Mrs. Bishop's pen.

A new book by Dr. Hillier, entitled 'South African Studies,' contains a reprint of three lectures on South African history, giving an account of the native races, and of the Transvaal Dutch as they were in the days before mining. Several other occasional contributions, such as letters to the Times in reply to Mr. Selous, are included. Dr. Hillier is one of the men who has most right to be listened to, for in his twenty years' experience of the country he learnt the Boer language, served in war against natives as a comrade of Boers, and in Johannesburg was prominent among the leaders of the Reform movement, though unconnected with the capitalist interest.

The late Mr. Andrew Tuer, in his 'History of the Horn Book,' drew attention to an interesting phase of education in Old England. The Horn Book consisted usually of the alphabet, &c., printed on a small sheet of paper mounted on a handled wooden slab, and covered with a thin sheet of translucent horn, framed by brass or copper rimming fixed with tacks. The rarity of these relics of a past age was proved last summer when Mr. Tuer's collection was sold at Sotheby's at amazing prices. Mr. Elkin Mathews, of Vigo Street, secured at the sale upwards of 100 real horns, which he has had made up from an old Elizabethan example. This limited edition will be on sale at the end of October. The edition contains the usual printed matter found in Horn Books, viz., the alphabet, numerals, invocation, and Lord's Prayer; the backs are of plain oak, with a hole in the handle to be suspended from a girdle.

The subject of the next volume in the Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges, issued by the Cambridge University Press, will be the 'Book of Daniel.' For this the notes will be supplied by Canon Driver.

Mr. William Heinemann will shortly publish a novel entitled 'The Inheritors,' by Joseph Conrad and Ford Maddox Hueffer. 'The Provençal,' a new story by Mr. T. A. Cook, also appears in his list of early publications.

Professor Dowden's edition of 'Romeo and Juliet' will be issued by Messrs. Methuen & Co. immediately.

At a time when physical culture is so much in the air it is interesting to learn that the well-known tennis player Mr. Eustace H. Mills is engaged upon an illustrated work dealing with this subject. It was originally suggested by a kindred volume from the pen of Dr. Schmidt, a German authority, and Mr. Mills has obtained permission from this author to adapt certain portions of this treatise in his own work. The volume will be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.

'Modern Broods; or, Developments Unlooked For,' by Charlotte M. Yonge, is a story of the relations between a lady not old but old-fashioned, and her four young step-sisters, who have received part of their education at a high school. Readers of Miss Yonge will look with interest for her opinions on many of the new ways in education and in conduct; they will also recognise old friends in the volume, for some of the names familiar in the 'Daisy Chain' and the 'Pillars of the House' re-appear in these pages. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. publish the book.

This week Mr. Fisher Unwin publishes Mr. Stephen Townesend's 'A Thoroughbred Mongrel.' A children's book of an original character is 'Old Father Gander, or the Better Half (?) of Mother Goose,' which Mr. Fisher Unwin also publishes this week. It is described in the title as 'Rhymes and Jingles scratched from his own Goose-quill for English Goslings, illustrated with Impossible Geese, hatched and raised by Walter Scott Howard.' The book has sixteen plain and sixteen coloured full-page illustrations, and a cover illustrated in colour.

Mr. Charles R. Spence writes: 'In the "Notes and Announcements," page 359, in the Publishers' Circular, October 6, I have to thank you for the insertion of the kindly notice, which I know was communicated to you by a friend of my own. There is, however, a blank in that announcement which I feel in duty bound to draw your attention to, and that is the fact that the business of Messrs. Andrew Stevenson & Co. is still being conducted by the remaining partners, Mr. Andrew Stevenson and Mr. David Fleming, on much the same good old lines as it was started so admirably by Mr. Stevenson over forty years ago.'

Mr. R. C. Carton, author of the highly successful comedy, 'Lady Huntworth's Experiment,' takes the public into his confidence in a special interview which appears (with a portrait) in Cassell's Saturday Journal, and describes his methods of writing a modern play. In the course of the article Mr. Carton says: 'Having completed the first edition of an act, I bring to bear upon it what I should call the sand-paper and the wash-leather. I rewrite it, compressing and condensing it as I proceed. I have frequently reduced a first edition of an act extending to seventy-five pages of closely written manuscript to fifty pages in the final edition. I write entirely by ear. What I mean is that the sight of words on paper doesn't impress me very much until I've tried how the words sound. I speak my words aloud in my study in the tone and manner which I think the character should adopt.'

Mr. Lewis Wright has entirely re-written his work on 'Poultry,' and has altered and added to it to such an extent as to render it a new work. This will be issued in fortnightly parts: the first appears this week. Thirty new coloured plates and fifteen full-page illustrations have been expressly prepared for the work by Mr. J. W. Ludlow.

To Mr. Siepmann's French series has been added an edition of Daudet's masterpiece, 'Tartarin de Tarascon.' Students who are advanced enough to read this in class will surely find the lesson anything but tedious, and they will be free from the danger of thinking, as so many English public schoolboys have been led to think, by the literature provided for them, that all French books are dull except those which are prohibited.

'The Unpublished and Uncollected Poems of William Cowper,' which have been edited by Mr. Thomas Wright, is published in Mr. Fisher Unwin's 'Canoe Series.' The volume contains twenty-eight poems, fragments or couplets. Of these some have never been published, some have been published only in part, some are passages which for various reasons, and not necessarily on account of their inferiority, were cancelled by Cowper, and some have appeared only in periodicals not now easily accessible.

It will be good news to all literary students that the large and exceedingly valuable library of the late Mr. Henry Spencer Ashbee has been bequeathed to the British Museum. Mr. Ashbee, who died at Hawkhurst, Kent, on July 29 last, was an enthusiastic book collector, and with an ample fortune gained in the City he was enabled to indulge his cravings to the utmost. Among the most important works in his collection are a number of editions of 'Don Quixote,' of which he compiled an 'Iconography' in 1895, the result of many years' labour and enterprise in various parts of the world. One noticeable feature of the Ashbee Library is that nearly all the volumes are well and handsomely bound, for the collector had a perfect horror of a shabbily attired work. Those who pay much attention to the contents of books are usually indifferent to their exteriors, but here was an exception.

The great value of the Ashbee library, so far as the British Museum is concerned, will probably consist, as the Daily Chronicle correctly remarks, in the collection of French books, printed chiefly in small numbers for the members of several short-lived 'bibliophile' clubs. These books rarely appear in the market, and the funds of the British Museum do not allow the authorities to indulge in 'luxuries.' Now, however, Mr. Ashbee's bequest renders the Museum not only complete in this respect, but far superior to any other public library. An additional attraction in several of these beautifully produced books is that Mr. Ashbee has had them specially illustrated by eminent French book artists in water-colours, &c., and has had these original designs bound up with the volume. Thus, the copy of 'Les Contes Rémois,' by the Comte de Chivigné, has a number of extra pen-and-ink drawings, each poem having an exquisite little illustration. One of Mr. Ashbee's special favourites was Chodowiecki, the Cruikshank of Germany, and of this prolific artist he probably possessed everything he had done.

Mr. Ernest Needham, the international player and captain of Sheffield United, has written a handbook on Association Football which Messrs. Skeffington & Son are publishing.

Opinions and Reviews, the new magazine issued by Mr. John Macqueen, has several articles that ought to attract popular attention. Sir Charles Dilke and Sir Philip Fysh write about the Australian Commonwealth Bill, and various prominent churchmen give their reasons for leaving or remaining in (as the case may be) the English Church Union.

Mr. Havelock Ellis's 'The Nineteenth Century, a Dialogue in Utopia' will be published on the 16th by Mr. Grant Richards.

Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. announce a new story by Miss Clowes, entitled 'Mrs. Frederick Graham.'

Early Virginia is not quite unvisited ground so far as novelists go, but Mr. Hulbert Fuller, in his new romance, 'Vivian of Virginia,' has endeavoured, by a judicious use of old-time language and customs, to present a realistic picture of the period. His story will be published by Messrs. Jarrold & Son.

Messrs. Blackie & Son are to issue a new illustrated edition of the chief plays of Shakespeare. Each volume is to have a coloured frontispiece and about sixteen black-and-white illustrations from drawings by Gordon Browne and other artists.

Mr. E. V. Lucas has written a prefatory note to the one-volume edition of Sir George Dasent's 'The Story of Burnt Njal' which Mr. Grant Richards will publish on the 16th.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin issues his Literary Pen this week. The effort has been to make a smooth-running steel pen with a quill-like action. Literary workers will find the Literary Pen well worth their attention.

The scheme of Commercial Education by Correspondence which has been projected in connection with the new issue of Cassell's Popular Educator has created considerable interest. The large first edition of Part I. has already been exhausted, and the part has been reprinted to meet the continuous demand.

To solve the vexed 'servant girl' problem would seem a difficult undertaking, especially in a novel. In 'Nella, the Heart of the Army,' to be published in a few days by Mr. John Macqueen, a new novelist, Mr. Philip Verrill Mighels, has made the effort.

THE READING OF KINGS.

It is interesting if not always satisfactory to know the kind of reading most favoured by the rulers of this world. Of one of these, no less a potentate than the Sultan Abdul Hamid II., some particulars are given by Herr Bernhard Stern in a recent issue of the Pester Lloyd. On the heights of Beschiktasch stands the Sultan's residence, the Yildiz Kiosque, which contains many offices of state, among others a translation office. Here a crowd of officials who speak and write all the languages of Europe and the East are constantly engaged; and for their use all the political and illustrated newspapers of importance are procured, from which extracts are made and translated for the Sultan. There are fifteen superior translators, called dragoman-secretaries, in this office, and their pay is from 10 to 40 Turkish pounds monthly. The translations are not limited to political publications; novels and romances in all languages are also translated for the Sultan, and until now 5,500 have found their way into the imperial library. They are all written on thick white royal octavo gilt-edged paper, and are fastened together with green and red ribbons by the translators themselves. After circulating throughout the harem they are preserved in the library. The German language is represented in this translation office by a native of Germany, Wely Bey, son of a Bremen merchant named Bolland. The Sultan's favourite reading is criminal romances; he subscribes to all newspapers containing reports of the proceedings in the law courts, and there is no writer of stories of crime in whatever language whose works have not been translated for him. It is right to add that the Sultan has had the works of Carmen Sylva translated by Wely Bey.

'AN OLD MAN'S HOLIDAYS.'*

Here we have another of the fresh and charming books which the world owes to the 'Amateur Angler's' love of nature and delight in angling. We put love of nature first because the author is a born nature lover, and an angler very much by chance. It is not hard to imagine him repeating in a strain of rapture the words of Borrow, 'Life is sweet, brother. . . . There's day and night, brother, both sweet things; sun, moon, and stars, all sweet things; there's likewise a wind on the heath.' In this little book there is at least as much of the joy of being abroad when the wind is on the heath, and sun and moon are bright, and day and night cast their mystic lights and shadows, as in the art of the angler. For this multitudes of readers will be thankful; for many are the children of nature who never handle a rod and are not moved by the thrilling excitement of landing ten-pounders. We cannot all be piscatorial experts; but most of us are touched by the song of the wind and the shadow of the cloud on the hill side. It is late in the day to praise 'The Amateur Angler's' love of the open air for its own sake, or his gift of bringing scenes of grandeur or loveliness vividly before the reader. The sweet breath of meadows and the murmur of rivers as well as of winds lend charm to all he writes, and that charm is certainly not less in 'An Old Man's Holidays' than in 'Days in Dovedale' or 'By Meadow and Stream.'

The book opens with a note of sadness. The author enjoyed the enviable fortune of numbering among his friends Mr. R. D. Blackmore and Mr. William Black, who have recently passed one in ripe old age, the other, alas! still in his prime. Their memory and that of other old friends is gracefully commemorated, so that, as we have said, the opening note is sad. But the sadness speedily vanishes; the high spirits of the angler recover themselves, and thenceforward all is light and bright and attractive. The volume tells of fishing expeditions on the Itchen, in South Wales, and in Cornwall, varied with reminiscence, anecdote, and sketches of scenery. It has the prime merit of taking the reader out of doors, now into bracing wind and rain, now into summer heat, and again into genial spring or autumn warmth and softness. Moreover, we share the writer's glow and excitement when a big fish is hooked. That is the charm of the book, that whatever the author happens to be doing the reader also does in imagination. The style is remarkably easy and buoyant. Angling evidently keeps a man young, for, despite the title of the book, there is no trace whatever of age, either in manner or matter—with the exception of the prefatory note already mentioned. Some of the incidents described are highly amusing. Thus readers who do not happen to be anglers will thoroughly enjoy the account of the attempts made to capture an exceedingly lively trout in the Itchen. It went off with three hooks, and seemed to thrive on them. There is a suspicion, indeed, that it laughed in a fishy way at the chagrin of the angler, and there is the best evidence it was ready for more sport.

One of the best sections of the book is that devoted to 'Our Holiday in Cornwall,' which is full of the peculiar charm of the wild west country; but indeed the whole volume is redolent of streams and meadows. Those who have tried to write know how difficult it is to convey to one reading in cold blood the sights and sounds of the country. This 'The Amateur Angler' does with singular success, which is but another way of saying that he has written a fascinating book, not merely for anglers, but for nature lovers and all who like to be taken out of doors. Finally, it is daintily produced, very prettily illustrated with landscape and other views, and is of a convenient size for the pocket.

REORGANISATION OF MESSRS. HARPER & BROTHERS.

From American papers just to hand we learn that the firm of Messrs. Harper & Brothers was incorporated at Albany, N.Y., on September 21, to carry on business in New York. The capital of the reorganised company is, as we have previously announced, $2,000,000, and the directors are: George B. M. Harvey, Alexander E. Orr, William M. Laffan, Frederick T. Leigh, William A. Nash, J. Henry Harper, Arthur D. Chandler, Frederick A. Duneka, and Clarence W. McIlvaine.

The plan of reorganisation contemplates the issuing of $1,500,000 first mortgage 5 per cent. 100-year gold bonds, and an issue of $2,000,000 fifty-year income bonds, with voting power, is provided for, to be delivered to general creditors at par, the excess to remain in the treasury. These bonds will be entitled during the first two years to interest, if earned, at the rate of not exceeding 1 per cent., and after that period at the rate of 2 per cent. until the Morgan indebtedness and all other indebtedness secured by pledge of first mortgage bonds as collateral shall have been fully paid or otherwise provided for, and thereafter the bonds shall bear 5 per cent. interest, if earned. After the indebtedness secured by the mortgage bonds is paid, if the net earnings of the company exceed the amount of interest payable on the income bonds, the surplus is to be applied to the payment of dividends upon the stock.

The common stock is to be issued to present shareholders. will be voted by a voting trust, comprising J. P. Morgan, Alexander E. Orr, and George B. M. Harvey as trustees. The royalties due authors when the receiver was appointed is to be paid by the reorganised company in full.

A TEACHER'S LIBRARY OF PURE MATHEMATICS.

Mr. G. B. Mathews, M.A., F.R.S., writing in the School World, gives a brief list of the books which he thinks ought to be found in the library of a teacher of mathematics. He explains that the range of subjects considered has been practically confined to arithmetic, algebra, Euclid, geometrical and analytical conics, and plane trigonometry; and, with one exception, all the works are written in English. At the same time, an attempt has been made to give the list a representative character by including not only mathematical treatises, but works dealing with the teaching and history of the subject, as well as a few others of a more general kind. It is rather disquieting to be told that although there are numerous good English class-books on arithmetic, there are none which deal with the subject in a really scientific way. As an exposition of first principles, Mr. Mathews considers Tannery's treatise is infinitely superior to any other he has ever seen; at the same time, it is written in an attractive way, and is anything but dry. It is unnecessary, he adds, to say anything about Chrystal's 'Algebra' and Hobson's 'Trigonometry,' which have clearly established themselves as the standard treatises.

The following is Mr. Mathews's list:

THE PROSE WRITERS OF CANADA.

At the Conference of Librarians held recently in Montreal, Dr. S. E. Dawson, Queen's Printer, Ottawa, read an interesting paper on the prose writers of Canada. The essay is really an historical sketch dealing with Canadian literature since its first small beginnings. Coming to contemporary writers, Dr. Dawson remarked that literature, in the opinion of the majority of the present day, consists mainly of fiction, and the world in its old age is going back to the story-tellers. Continuing, he said:—Nor are we able to endure the long novels which held our parents in rapt attention. The stories must be shorter, and the more pictures the better. This last phase of literature is cultivated by all our younger writers, and, while the task is too extensive for anything but most imperfect performance, a few words on this branch of my subject are necessary. One remark only I venture to make in the way of criticism, that, while in science we have produced some few men who stand in the very front rank of their respective subjects, we cannot boast yet of a novelist who has taken rank with the great masters of the craft, and none perhaps who has attained to the very forefront of the second class.

The Hon. P. J. O. Chauveau, in 1852, led the way in French novel writing with Charles Guerin, and he was followed, in 1863, by Philippe Aubert De Gaspé, in 'Les anciens Canadiens,' a book which has recently been translated and published in New York. In 1877 William Kirby published 'Le Chien d'Or.' This was long thought to be, and perhaps still is, the best Canadian novel. It met with much favour outside of Canada. The story as given in the legend is one of very exceptional interest, and is told with much literary skill.

Since then the writers of stories have become numerous in Canada. Miss Machar, of Kingston, has written some capital novels of Canadian life. Mr. James Macdonald Oxley is fully equal to the best writers of books of adventure for boys. Since 1887 he has produced a surprising number of books, published usually out of Canada, though all upon Canadian life and history.

Gilbert Parker is the chief name among Canadian writers of fiction, and, though he now resides in England, his subjects are Canadian and his books abound in local colour and incident.

During the last few years William McLennan has made a reputation far beyond the limits of Canada, not only by his dialect stories but by his charming book, 'Spanish John,' a novel without a woman and yet full of interest. This book is remarkable for its singularly pure English style.

Miss Lily Dougall not long ago surprised the English public by a strong novel in an original vein, 'Beggars All,' published by Longmans. The subject was not Canadian, but her later books deal with more familiar scenes. Nor should we omit to count Miss Blanche Macdonald and Mrs. Harrison in the number of our lady novelists.

Mrs. Coates, now of Calcutta, but then Sara Jeanette Duncan, wrote three books, not only bright and interesting but with a vein of most charming humour. One was a volume of travels round the world, another 'An American Girl in London,' an exceedingly clever story which appeared first in the Illustrated London News, and the third 'A Voyage of Consolation.'

Robert Barr is a Canadian who has made a name among English novelists. His early books are on Canadian subjects and in scenes where his life was for the most part passed. Mr. William Lighthall is also among our writers of fiction. He is the author of two novels, 'The Young Seigneur' and 'The False Repentigny,' which were well received. His books as a poet or as a Canadian anthologist do not fall within the scope of this paper.

The latest development of modern literature is the short story, and E. W. Thomson, now on the staff of the Youth's Companion, is a master in that art. There are many others; among them Duncan Campbell Scott, better known as a poet; and Dr. Frechette (whose French poetry was crowned by the Academy of France) has achieved the success of writing a book of capital short stories in English and so of winning laurels in two languages.

The prospects for a distinctive Canadian school of literature are not bright, and, indeed, any provincial narrowness of literary effort is not desirable. Our writers can reflect lustre on their country only when they venture into the broad world of our language and conquer recognition in the great realm of Anglo-Saxon letters. The great centres of our race, where are to be won the great prizes of life, must always attract the brightest and most ambitious spirits. One of our own people—a successful author now in London—writes in the Canadian Magazine to reproach us for underestimating ourselves. It is a good fault, even if uncommon among English speakers. Our youth are unlearning it, but they will not grow great by self-assertion—only by performance. Canada, concluded Dr. Dawson, must not regret her children if they achieve fame in other lands. John Bonner and William G. Sewell left Quebec long ago for the Herald and Harper and the New York Times. Lanigan wrote 'The Akhound of Swat' one night waiting for telegrams in the World office. Nova Scotia lost John Foster Kirk, who completed Prescott's great task, and Simon Newcomb, of the United States Navy Department, astronomer and mathematician. From New Brunswick went Professor De Mille, the brilliant author of the 'Dodge Club' and 'A Strange Manuscript'; George Teall, the archivist and leading writer of South Africa; and May Agnes Fleming, a story writer who, for many years, earned with her pen in New York an income as large as that of a cabinet minister at Ottawa. From Kingston went Grant Allen and Professor George Romanes—a star of intellect in the regions of the higher science where it touches the realm of metaphysics. His premature death was lamented as a loss to Cambridge University.

We read that, in remote ages, the followers of Pythagoras, and, in mediæval times, the adepts of the Rosy Cross, had the power of separating at will their souls from their bodies; and then their spirits would travel away with the speed of thought and hover in the semblance of stars over far-off lands. But always a long trail of faint phosphorescent light connected the shining spirit with the quiet body in which its light was born.

So with us—we follow with interest the fortunes of our countrymen—we rejoice in their advancement, and star after star may leave us, but still we feel that their success is ours and some faint lustre of their brilliance quickens with pride the heart of their motherland.

WANTED, A WAR POET.

Perhaps nothing showed more plainly the unusual tumult of unhappiness prevailing in the English mind than the strange and violent epidemic of doggrel verse-writing. We broke out on all sides into a perfect storm of patriotic jingles, and found our best solace in it, next to the blessed busy-ness entailed by the manifold and sometimes eccentric collections of objects dispatched for the kit of our fighting men. Alas! nobody can forget how some of the rhymes found tune-makers of the same quality, and hence new and everlasting torments from the indefatigable barrel organ.

To see the most staid of the daily papers breaking out into these amazing jingles day by day, was a more pregnant and portentous sign—if the foreign journals had only known it—than all the popular uproar they had sent their correspondents here to seek sadly and in vain. Perhaps if we had found a war poet, a real one, belonging to our own generation and ready for our necessities, we need not have done it, he might have undertaken it for us. But there was nobody, literally nobody. He whom many of us looked to, the strongest writer of our day and at times the finest artist, only led the way for the weakest of us to follow with that deplorable, meaningless, and vulgar jingle which has hardly ceased to pursue his hapless fellow-countrymen at every turn, to their suffering and misery. Anything with a swing and a rhyme served at that time to satisfy the sort of craving for patriotic doggrel which possessed the whole people. And when it was backed by the name of Rudyard Kipling the result in hard cash was such as to silence criticism. For after all when a literary misdemeanour can convert itself into thousands and thousands of pounds sterling used to such good purpose, what can the heart-broken admirer of a writer of great gifts venture to say? Only that The Absent Minded Beggar was good business for the War Funds—poetry has nothing to say here.

But if Mr. Kipling was thus led astray, what could be expected of the rest of the world of smaller lights or mere mortals? Certainly nothing that any of us did was worse, and some of it was of course a great deal better. Really the flood of doggrel which swept over the country deserves a respectful tribute, since practically all of it is forgotten while the immense relief and satisfaction which it gave at the time to a certain number of people—and mainly, of course, the writers themselves—was quite incalculable. As I said before, if a poet had emerged for our needs, possibly the plague might have been more quickly stayed, but this was not the case in spite of some really good verses here and there.—Mrs. Henry Birchenough in the Nineteenth Century.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Correspondence College Press).—'First Class Mechanics of Solids,' by F. Rosenberg, M.A. The great success of this work, which is designed for the elementary examination of the Science and Art Department, has called for a third edition. The volume forms an admirable guide for the candidate at the South Kensington Examination, and should be found exceedingly useful by others as well. It is thoroughly practical in all its details, and not a page is wasted in unnecessary detail.

From Mr. H. G. Commin (Bournemouth).—'Flora of Bournemouth, including the Isle of Purbeck: being an account of the Flowering Plants, Ferns, &c., of the Country within a Twelve-mile Radius of the Centre of Bournemouth,' by Edward F. Linton, M.A. The lengthy sub-title of Mr. Linton's work sufficiently explains its contents, and it remains but to say something of its general execution. This is painstaking, but not always quite satisfying, the amount of new information being less than we looked for. In a few introductory pages the author speaks of the topography, climate, geology, botanical divisions, &c., of the neighbourhood, and gives a list of the plants occurring in one division only; he also supplies a useful plan of the flora. The volume will be found interesting by the botanist, and to a certain extent informative.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'An American Venus: Emotional Romance,' by Elliott Preston, M.D. 'The general contour of her figure is characterised by a voluptuous fulness, combined with the most exquisite taperings imaginable at the juncture of the perfectly formed hands and feet—a voluptuousness which might, alas, be coarsened into vulgar stoutness in middle age, but which now lends to the youthful and supple figure a matchless and sensuous charm.' Such are the words with which Dr. Preston describes his heroine, and from them the reader may gather a very fair idea of the character of the story. We are also told that 'her toilette was a masterpiece of the Maison Worth, designed for her at an expense of not less than £1,000; and the magnificent necklace of flashing diamonds, that rhythmically rose and fell upon the billowy undulations of her generously bared bosom, shone like miniature stars, as they cast back the brilliant beams of the unclouded moon.' Naturally such a beauteous being has experiences not given to ordinary mortals, and these the author relates in his novel. They are indeed of an extraordinary flashing description. Dr. Preston himself appears in the character of Manfred as a frontispiece—a very fine photograph, though of somewhat terrifying aspect; but what connection this has with the story we have been unable to discover. Readers, however, we have little doubt, will be glad to have a portrait of the author of so remarkable a work.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'Mother-Sister,' by Edwin Pugh. Mr. Pugh again shows in this story what a close study he has made of the [illegible] being a literary merchant: with a keen eye to artistic effect, he has improved upon Nature's picturesque surroundings here and there, but that is no matter; the story is very clever. 'Mother-Sister' is a young, rather old-fashioned girl of fifteen, daughter of an ex-prize-fighter, who, when her father is sentenced to six months' imprisonment for an assault on a successful rival in love, takes charge of her shipwrecked brother and sisters. Maidie, as she is commonly called—her real name being Madeline Annabel Marmory—is a shrewd, uncommonly-knowing little woman, the natural outcome of the sordid surroundings amid which she has been brought up. Yet with all her sharpness, so closely allied to cunning, there is a certain honesty and dignity, and this is shown in her treatment of the woman about whom Dan Marmory has his quarrel, and in her attitude towards 'Converted Jane,' the brand redeemed from the burning by the Salvation Army. But it is in the picture of Maidie's courageous fight for her relatives that the reader will be principally interested. When her father is first arrested she exhibits an energy and fertility of resource that prompts the 'smart' solicitor for the defence to remark that nothing more can be done in the way of preliminary arrangements except 'interview the Queen'; and on her elder sister, later in the story, running away with a fleshly book-maker, it is Maidie who at once follows the delinquent pair to Brighton, tracks them to their lodgings, and succeeds in bringing the repentant Bridget home, subsequently to become the wife of an honourable man in her own position of life. The story is full of realistic touches of thought and manners at the East End, and should powerfully appeal to all readers who are broad-minded enough to take interest in something beyond the mere chronicles of society life.

From Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.—'Two Stage Plays: Denzil Herbert's Atonement and Bondage,' by Lucy Snowe. There is an undercurrent of deep if perverted feeling in these plays. The author has embarked on a sea of stormy doubt and, as usual in such cases, has apparently lost her mental balance. The book may be said to be a protest against the stereotyped superficial view of respectable society, but a somewhat exaggerated view of the situation is taken. It is a case of nervous unrest and inquietude against worldly indifference and great selfishness. But the plays undoubtedly have merit, though we scarcely think the authoress has utilised her abilities to the best advantage.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Workshop Mathematics,' by Frank Castle. Parts I. and II. The ordinary artisan, it is pointed out by Mr. Castle, will not study pure mathematics first and then apply the principles thus learnt to the requirements of his work. He is impatient of this plan, and so the question arises how to teach him mathematics enough by dealing with the calculations themselves which he is actually called upon to make at his work. To meet the difficulty classes in Workshop Arithmetic, Workshop Calculations, and Practical Mathematics have grown up, and it is to provide for young workmen beginning to attend one of these classes that these little books have been prepared. Part I. deals with vulgar and decimal fractions, contracted multiplication and division, simple arithmetical methods, simple algebra, measurement of areas, and so forth, while part II. takes up the subject of labour-saving methods, such as duodecimals, logarithms, and the slide rule; mensuration, graphic representation of varying quantities, and more advanced algebra. Each part is well supplied with exercises, and is admirably arranged with a view to affording the most serviceable assistance.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'Mab,' by Harry Lindsay. In this story the author again treats of life within the Methodist community, a subject that his previous volumes have shown him to be well acquainted with. 'Mab' is a little girl who is rescued from a shipwreck and adopted by an elderly couple who have lost their own children. As she grows up she shows signs of being less constricted in mind than her adopted parents, and when ultimately she decides upon going on the stage all intercourse is at an end between them; indeed, poor old Matthew Topliss is so affected that he loses his senses. It had always been the great dream of his life that having no son himself to enter the ministry, Mab should marry the son of Robert Macdonald, his fellow class leader and co-steward at 'Old Wesley,' who it is hoped will some day devote himself to the work of labouring in God's vineyard. Mab's career on the stage is successful, but is cut short by an affliction of blindness. She returns home only to find that her father is unable to recognise her. Hughie Macdonald, however, remains leal and true, and as he has become a minister their marriage brings about the fulfilment of Matthew's wish. Two or three days before his death the old man recovers his senses, and with his blessings on the happy couple the story comes to an end. Of course, it was hardly to be expected that Mab should be left blind, but in restoring her sight we are not sure that the author has acted altogether wisely. It is a homely, sympathetic story, revealing an intimate knowledge of Methodist life, but not distinguished by any exceptional ability or descriptive power.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Siege of Mafeking,' by J. Angus Hamilton. The author of this interesting volume takes up his story on board the Dunvegan Castle as she ploughs her foamy way to the Cape. His next chapter is written from Capetown, where he reviews the situation and hazards some forecast as to the future. He then advances to De Aar, on the borders of the Orange Free State, and so makes his way to Mafeking, taking Kimberley on the way. Once in the little town and the interest of his narrative deepens. At the time Mr. Hamilton took up his residence in Mafeking—early October of last year—war had not yet been declared, but was hourly expected, and men were undecided whether to stay and defend the place or to skip with their women and children. As time wore on, and the numbers of the Boer force concentrated upon the border increased, the number of men available for actual volunteer service grew beautifully less. The skirmish at Five Mile Bank may be said to have started the fighting, and from this point Mr. Hamilton's account of the siege grows exceedingly interesting, and each day seems to furnish some event of thrilling excitement. Special mention is made of the deliberate manner in which Commandant Cronje directed the fire of his siege guns on the buildings protected by the Red Cross flag, and of the many acts of treachery perpetrated by our foes. 'A Midnight Sortie' is described with spirit, and in the intervals of writing about active hostilities the author finds time to give utterance to his views on such matters as wasted energies, the economy of the situation, the good work of the hospital, and native life. And so we come to the final great fight, and the subsequent relief of the town. It is an absorbing volume, the interest of which is greatly enhanced by the numerous illustrations, produced from photographs. There are also several excellent plans.

From Mr. David Nutt.—'English Composition: a Manual of Theory and Practice,' by L. Cope Cornford. The author of this little volume has entered very thoroughly into the intricacies of his subject, and his work is not merely instructive but interesting as well. In the first place he considers the art of expression, and from this he proceeds to a discussion of the subject, the four essential factors of composition—invention, selection, disposition, and diction—and the five orders of composition—the story, description, dialogue, letter, and essay. Numerous examples are quoted from such authors as Sir Thomas Malory, Sir Walter Scott, John Bunyan, Laurence Sterne, Shakespeare, Fielding, Lamb, Dickens, Thackeray, Savage Landor, Robert Louis Stevenson, &c., and a variety of exercises are suggested. The volume is principally designed for the use of trained teachers, who are likely to find it of excellent assistance. For this reason the examples have been selected to present as great a variety as possible, and opportunity has been afforded in many ways for the instructor to make his task agreeable and interesting.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'How to Deal with your Bankers,' by Henry Warren. Though the title of this little work has a somewhat ferocious sound, the writer, we can assure the reader, is eminently quiet, methodical and businesslike. In the most practical fashion he considers the questions of credit accounts, bills and promissory notes, discount of bills, coupons, stocks and shares, foreign drafts, banks, shares, and all other items that enter into the customer's business dealings with his banker. Some of the hints given may provoke a smile, but are none the less valuable on that account. Thus it is pointed out, especially for the benefit of ladies, that every letter addressed to the bank agent, whether marked private or not, is read by all the clerks in the office, who thus find plenty of material for amusement. Again, 'when the bank agent leaves his deck in order to inquire across the counter concerning the state of your health, or to discuss the weather with you, your suspicions should be instantly aroused; and you should carefully examine your account to see if it be overcharged, or whether you cannot transfer a sum to deposit.' That Mr. Warren's volume has real practical value may be seen from the fact that a third edition has now been called for.

From Messrs. George Routledge & Sons.—'Classification and Uses of Finger Prints,' by E. R. Henry, C.S.I. This interesting little volume—prepared by order of the Government of India—is divided into two parts. The first contains the definitions by means of which any finger impression may be accurately described, and explains the various points that should be taken into consideration when two prints are brought under examination with a view to establishing identity or dissimilarity; while in Part 2 will be found an account of the system of classification, the full scheme of which is set forth in a specially designed plate or synopsis. In the space at our disposal we are unfortunately not able to enter into the numerous points of distinction—the ridges, creases, arches, whorls, central pocket loops, and so forth; but we can assure the reader who has a taste for this variety of investigation that he will find it most interesting. Of course, in India finger impressions are greatly used in the detection of crime, and as evidence of identity are largely instrumental in preventing perjury and personation. The book is illustrated with a large number of these impressions.

From Messrs. Skeffington & Son.—'Via Trita,' by Gilbert Player. The quotation with which the author heads this collection of essays reveals something of their character. They are, in the words of Bacon, 'of a nature whereof a man shall find much in experience, little in bookes.' A very slight glance over the pages shows that they are something grave in their tendency—sedate thoughtfulness little relieved by humour or bright descriptive writing. Each of the essays is, of course, short after the approved fashion of the model. 'Of Melancholy' the author says: 'It is the shadow of sorrow; the twilight of a northern summer which never glides into utter darkness. It is the fringe of trees bordering on the dreary desert of grief; we feel gusts of the simoon of sadness, yet know we are safe from suffocation. We have the pleasure of martyrdom without its pain, and we revel in it. . . . Melancholy is rather a pleasant companion at times, but she is always very selfish.' This short extract will exhibit the nature of Mr. Player's volume better than any words of ours could do.

From the same.—'The Days of our Pilgrimage: Devotional Readings for Church and Home,' by the Rev. S. C. Lowry, M.A. This little work is intended both for the clergy and laity. To the former it will furnish short readings to accompany public worship in church, and the latter will find many earnest words of exhortation on the more important departments of the Christian life. The book is admirable in tone and of refined, if somewhat conventional, expression.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Devil's Half Acre,' by 'Alien.' The 'Devil's Half Acre' is the name given to a mining locality in New Zealand, the rough inhabitants of which are dominated by a strange religious fanatic known as 'Old Jeremiah' or 'The Prophet.' This man, whose right name is John Jermyn, is tormented by a remembrance of wrong-doing in the past, and the harshness of his puritanical teaching is really a whip that he applies to his own back. In days gone by he was the means of a clergyman's wife leaving her husband, and the pretty girl, Rose Jermyn, who now lives with him, is not, as he very well knows, his own daughter, but the child of the Rev. Holmes Hardcastle. The expiation of his sin forms a very considerable portion of the story, but there are interlacing interests that afford variety and relief. Naturally, Rose has her admirers even in so uncultivated a spot as the 'Devil's Half Acre,' and equally of course trouble arises through this circumstance. But the narrative, after leading the reader through many incidents of strong passion, eventually comes to a peaceful conclusion, and Rose is left tranquil and happy. All the characters are drawn with a vigorous hand, and in one or two instances with some pretension to refined insight. As a novel it will merit favourable comparison with anything the author has yet written.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Cross Triumphant,' by Florence Morse Kingsley. The facts of Scripture history about the time of the coming of our Saviour have here been employed with great skill and reverence as a background for a story of much delicate interest. The actual period at which the events of the narrative are supposed to take place is threescore years after the shepherds had been divinely led to the inn at Bethlehem, there to worship the holy babe lying in a manger; and the events deal with the troublous times that immediately followed the crucifixion of Christ. The hero, Phannias, is a young man with 'the body of a warrior, the face of an angel, and the soul of a child.' He has been brought up as a Nazarite in all the strictness of the Jewish faith, it being intended that he shall become a priest; but from the very first he is attracted by the stories of Jesus Christ, and is inclined to think that the Messiah has already come. Ultimately this becomes with him a settled conviction, and he joins the body of true believers; but this is only after he has passed through many exciting experiences at Jerusalem, during the celebrated siege of which he stands out as a prominent figure. The story is one of great merit, and distinctly above the average of present-day fiction. It is illustrated by W. S. Stacey.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'Brothers of the Chain,' by George Griffith. The chain here alluded to is that which binds certain French convicts together in the bagnes of the Ile Nou. These convicts are enabled to escape through the medium of a powerful secret society, termed the 'Brotherhood of the Chain,' the leading spirit of which is mysteriously known as the Master of the Chain. Each of the convicts has his or her task assigned, and the combined object of their efforts is to make war upon society generally. Victor Merrivale, the most distinguished of the gang, has rather a good time of it in London, being amply supplied with money and moving in highly aristocratic circles; but then comes the dread order of the Master that he shall murder his own twin brother, a Marquis, and usurp the title. It is impossible to resist the decree—to do so would simply mean his consignment again to the hideous dungeons of La Nouvelle so he prepares to obey. But a more horrible method than murdering the Marquis is decided upon. It so happens that this nobleman, returning home from a tour round the world, is a passenger on board the Union Steamship Company's boat, 'Scandinavian,' from Capetown, and the brotherhood resolve to intercept the vessel, 'hold her up,' and eventually sink her, having first taken charge of the Marquis and a large amount of treasure in the shape of gold and diamonds that forms part of the ship's cargo. Probably it may be wondered how this audacious enterprise is to be carried out, but the brotherhood possess a wonderful speedy steam yacht, fitted on the turbine principle, and armed like a gunboat. Against such an antagonist the liner is, of course, quite powerless. When the brotherhood have got the Marquis into their grasp, it is their intention to send him to the hulks at La Nouvelle as the escaped convict, Victor in the meantime figuring before the world as the Marquis. This little plan is successfully carried out, but unfortunately for the perpetrators there happens to be a certain resolute, level-headed young man, Mark Standish, who is interested in their doings, and mainly through his efforts the whole conspiracy is exposed. The incidents of the story are very exciting, and the identity of the mysterious Master is well disguised to the close.

Lord Roberts on his Coming Task.

The Duke of Wellington, it is said, though as a soldier he covered himself with glory in the field, was by no means an ideal administrator. As head of the Army in time of peace he permitted its efficiency to decline, with the result that immediately after his death came the unhappy collapse in the Crimea. It is argued, then, that Lord Roberts may fail in the same way, and that, for all his splendid work in war, he may not be the man best fitted for so colossal a task as the placing of our defences upon a business footing.

Those who write thus have overlooked the fact that in his admirable 'Rise of Wellington' Lord Roberts has placed his finger upon this very defect in the Iron Duke's career, and has dwelt upon it with words of well-merited censure. 'It is extraordinary,' he says, 'that as a Cabinet Minister and afterwards as Commander-in-Chief, Wellington did so little to remedy the defects or to carry out much-needed reforms in the organisation and administration of the Army. . . . What renders Wellington's action in this matter the more unaccountable is the fact that he was well aware of the impossibility of upholding our national rights and interests if England were unprepared for war.' He goes on to point out that the blame rested upon the shoulders of the Duke and not upon the nation. The nation would have followed him 'had he been patriotic enough openly to speak his mind.'

The views thus propounded by Lord Roberts are those of a soldier with an unswerving sense of duty. Wellington, unhappily, cannot be acquitted of a certain weakness of principle in his later years. He had not the strength and loftiness of character which the British people has learned to associate with the name of Lord Roberts. Our new Commander-in-Chief may be trusted to act upon his own criticisms. He, we may feel assured, will have the rare moral courage to tell the country the unpalatable truth; while if he has to call upon the people of England for self-sacrifice, who has a greater right to do so than one who has given to their sacred cause a beloved and only son?—Daily Mail, October 9, 1900.

THE RISE OF WELLINGTON

By Field-Marshal

LORD ROBERTS, V.C.

A very interesting study of Wellington, with many curious sidelights on his character, is supplied by Lord Roberts's little book, "The Rise of Wellington." Here a soldier, as sympathetic to his men as the Duke was unsympathetic, discusses with a soldier's eye and a soldier's plainness and frankness the main points of Wellington's career, and deplores, as we have done, the Duke's attacks upon the men who served under him.'—Spectator.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—the Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO PUBLISHERS AND OTHERS.

CHARLES R. SPENCE (late of the Firm of Messrs. ANDREW STEVENSON & Co., Market, Edinburgh) having leased Temporary Premises in the Waverley Market here (where the forthcoming and doubtless historic Assembly of the United Free Church of Scotland is to be held), begs to intimate to Publishers and others that he will be glad to enter into arrangements with them for the Exhibition or Sale of suitable publications &c. that they might wish to bring under the notice of the vast concourse of ministers and thousands of others who have already booked seats for this gathering to such an extent that it is feared even the Market, huge as it is, will not accommodate all who desire to be present. Communications to be addressed [illegible]

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

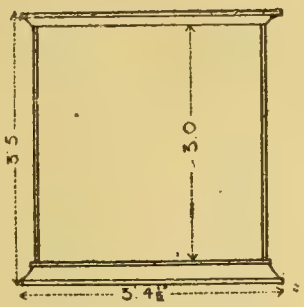
CHIVERS' BOOK ISSUE INDICATOR

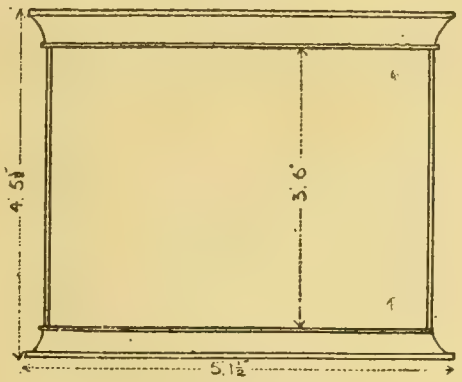
AND CHARGING SYSTEM.

That this Indicator is steadily gaining ground is shown by the fact that it has been adopted by the following Public Libraries:

BRADFORD.
BROMSGROVE.
CAMPBELTOWN, N.B.
CARLISLE.
DEWSBURY.
DERBY.
GRIMSBY.
HYDE.
JOHANNESBURG, S.A.
LANCASTER.



The Chivers' Indicator, 4,000 numbers.



The other Indicator, 4,000 numbers.

LEIGH.
LUTON.
LYDNEY INSTITUTE.
NEATH.
PERTH.
RAWMARSH.
REDDITCH.
SOUTHPORT.
ST. HELEN'S (2).
SYDNEY, N.S.W.
TYNEMOUTH.
WIGAN.
WORKINGTON.
WALLASEY.

For New Libraries adopting an Indicator this is undoubtedly the best. It is not claimed on its behalf that it is of the widest adoption, for it is comparatively new. The advantages over the devices hitherto most frequently used are:

1. That it is much smaller.
2. The figures are much clearer.
3. Declares overdues automatically.
4. Lends itself more readily to statistical purposes.
5. Is quicker in operation.
6. Is cheaper and costs less to maintain.
7. Keeps clean and bright.
8. It does everything other Indicators do, and supplements them where they have proved weak.
9. Apart from its own Charging System, it is a device which shows in smallest space books IN and OUT. This Indicator is alone in adapting itself to any system of book-keeping or charging which the Librarian has in use and desires to retain.

FULL PARTICULARS, DIAGRAMS, AND ILLUSTRATIONS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

THE CHILD:

A Study in the Evolution of Man

BY

Dr. ALEXANDER FRANCIS CHAMBERLAIN, M.A., Ph.D.,

Lecturer on Anthropology in Clark University, Worcester, Mass.

The importance of the scientific study of children is rapidly becoming generally recognised. Dr. Chamberlain has for many years devoted himself to this study, and is recognised as one of the most learned and competent authorities on the subject. He approaches it with a full sense of its wide significance, and his book is an exhaustive summary of recent investigations.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

MR. CONAN DOYLE'S HISTORY OF THE BOER WAR.

On October 23 will be published

With Maps, large post 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The Great Boer War

By A. CONAN DOYLE,

Author of 'The White Company,' 'Rodney Stone,' 'The Green Flag, and other Stories of War and Sport,' &c.

Mr. Conan Doyle was present in South Africa during a considerable portion of the war. He saw something of the operations with his own eyes, and he had exceptional opportunities of meeting and cross-examining officers and men who had taken part in these events. He combines considerable knowledge of military affairs with a fearless impartiality. Mr. Conan Doyle's history is the first attempt to gather the events of this drama into a single complete one-volume narrative.

LORD ROBERTS ON HIS COMING TASK

The Duke of Wellington, it is said, though as a soldier he covered himself with glory in the field, was by no means an ideal administrator. As head of the Army in time of peace he permitted its efficiency to decline, with the result that immediately after his death came the unhappy collapse in the Crimea. It is argued, then, that Lord Roberts may fail in the same way, and that, for all his splendid work in war, he may not be the man best fitted for so colossal a task as the placing of our defences upon a business footing.

Those who write thus have overlooked the fact that in his admirable 'Rise of Wellington' Lord Roberts has placed his finger upon this very defect in the Iron Duke's career, and has dwelt upon it with words of well-merited censure. 'It is extraordinary,' he says, 'that as a Cabinet Minister and afterwards as Commander-in-Chief, Wellington did so little to remedy the defects or to carry out much-needed reforms in the organisation and administration of the Army. . . . What renders Wellington's action in this matter the more unaccountable is the fact that he was well aware of the impossibility of upholding our national rights and interests if England were unprepared for war.' He goes on to point out that the blame rested upon the shoulders of the Duke and not upon the nation. The nation would have followed him 'had he been patriotic enough openly to speak his mind.'

THE RISE OF WELLINGTON

By Field-Marshal

LORD ROBERTS, V.C.

'A very interesting study of Wellington, with many curious sidelights on his character, is supplied by Lord Roberts's little book, "The Rise of Wellington." Here a soldier, as sympathetic to his men as the Duke was unsympathetic, discusses with a soldier's eye and a soldier's plainness and frankness the main points of Wellington's career, and deplores, as we have done, the Duke's attacks upon the men who served under him.'—Spectator.

October 19, 1900.

Of the writers who have recently come into prominence perhaps none has excited a more genuine interest than Mr. Frank T. Bullen. His career at sea before he became what someone has contemptuously called 'a writing man,' combined the elements of romance in a manner at once rare and fascinating, and when he stepped ashore to tell of the wonders of the deep and describe the life of the average sailor he found the public sympathetic and attentive. Mr. Rudyard Kipling in his own free and easy style proclaimed his merits, and a Nonconformist divine with an evident liking for slang has said that '"The Cruise of the "Cachalot" has absolutely taken the shine out of some of the romantic literature of such writers as even Stevenson and Rudyard Kipling.' Thus encouraged, Mr. Bullen seems to have said to himself: 'Go to, I will become a voluminous author, I will unload my note-books.' At any rate he has been writing too much. He has produced sea sketches, scraps of autobiography, and opinions on subjects regarding which his knowledge cannot be called profound, with a speed that is the reverse of good for his reputation. But we are glad to find he has returned to his early manner and the subject he knows best in 'The Men of the Merchant Service,' which Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have just published. Mr. Bullen has not the literary faculty of Mr. Clark Russell, but to common people he is perhaps a more acceptable writer, inasmuch as he tells a plain story plainly, and avoids those purple patches, those elaborate descriptions of the ocean in its varying moods which, however beautiful in themselves, pall when overdone or done too often. One sometimes suspects Mr. Russell is so enamoured of the sea that he grudges the necessary space and attention to humanity.

To his own advantage Mr. Bullen remembers that men and women are more interesting than 'a world of waters,' and gives many a touch and fact which prove him a student of human nature. His latest volume contains a great deal of information obtained at first hand about the working of ships, but still more about the men who work them. The book is divided into thirty-five chapters dealing with the master and his duties, the mate and his duties, the second and third mates, the bo'sun, carpenter, sail maker, steward, cook, apprentice, the A. B., the engineer, and the fireman and trimmer. When we say that the book runs to 335 pages it will be seen that Mr. Bullen treats his matter with due elaboration. Let it be added that he also treats it as would be possible to the efficient sailor only. The book is wonderfully full of detail bearing upon every part of a seaman's duties, pleasures (if he have any), food, and indeed everything that concerns him. We should imagine that it will prove of particular value to parents whose boys may be bitten by the mania for the sea. That it will deter many who fancy a sailor's life is all romance we have not the slightest doubt. Mr. Bullen does not mince words in describing the hardships, we might almost say the horrors, of the sailor's life. There is nothing of the recruiting sergeant in him; he describes with a simplicity which carries conviction what he knows, what he has himself endured and seen others enduring, and has clearly no object but to tell the truth and the whole truth. On the other hand, he gives valuable information regarding the seaman's training, and is especially full and clear about preliminaries—that is to say, about the candidate's course, whether his prospective post be that of master, ordinary seaman, cook, or steward.

Mr. Bullen puts in a strong plea for the sailing ship. 'I cannot,' he says in his interesting preface, 'conceal from myself the fact that the passing of the sailing ship is being greatly accelerated of late years, and that in all probability another twenty years will witness her final disappearance. On the other hand, I should not be at all surprised to see a sudden recrudescence of sailing-ship building.' He dwells on the economy of the sailer as compared with the steamer, pointing out very shrewdly that in cases in which speed is not of the first importance the sailing ship 'actually saves warehouse charges as well as freight.' He also makes an eloquent plea for the men of the mercantile marine. It is our duty, he thinks, to atone as far as possible for past neglect and ignorance due to lack of interest in order to show 'that at last we have awakened to the fact that in our mercantile marine we possess the most magnificent heritage ever built up for a free people by the courage and endurance of its sons.' We heartily commend Mr. Bullen's book to all who are interested in the sea or in sailors. It is packed full of interesting information and valuable suggestion.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mrs. Paget Toynbee, having undertaken to prepare for the Clarendon Press a new edition of the 'Letters of Horace Walpole,' would be greatly obliged if the owners of original letters, whether already printed or not, would kindly communicate with her, in order that the new edition may be made as complete and correct as possible. Many of the letters as hitherto printed are either fragmentary or disfigured by misreadings, and it is desirable that they should be corrected by collation with the originals. Mrs. Toynbee has already succeeded in collecting from various sources nearly two hundred letters which are not included in current editions; and it is probable that there are many others in private hands which she has not yet been able to trace. Any letters entrusted to her would be treated with scrupulous care, and returned to their owners as promptly as possible. To those who are unable to lend the originals Mrs. Toynbee would be grateful for careful copies. All obligations of this nature would of course be duly acknowledged by the editor. It is expected that the new edition, which will be provided with a full index, will be completed in ten or eleven octavo volumes. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Paget Toynbee, Dorney Wood, Burnham, Bucks.

The Cambridge University Press is about to make an addition to their Cambridge Science Primers in the shape of a volume on astronomy by Sir Robert Ball. Messrs. Constable & Co. also announce a work on this subject from the pen of Professor H. H. Turner, of Oxford. The latter volume will be of a more advanced character, and will treat of the important changes which have taken place in the methods and scope of astronomical science during the last quarter of a century.

Messrs. Hurst & Blackett will publish in a few days 'From the Cape to Cairo,' by Ewart Scott Grogan. The author during his explorations travelled over a vast expanse of territory—6,500 miles—and visited many undeveloped or slightly known regions. Among these was the country between Tanganyika and the Mountains of the Moon. During this part of his journey he was accompanied by Mr. Sharp, who has written the account of Uganda and the road to the coast, where the latter traveller quitted the expedition. Mr. Grogan afterwards continued his journey through the district where Stanley found Emin Pasha, and then went down the Nile to Fashoda. It was during this part of his explorations that he discovered the Woatsch tribe. The work has been illustrated by Mr. A. D. McCormick from sketches by the author.

At the commencement of next month Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons will publish a new novel by Mr. W. E. W. Collins, author of 'The Don and the Undergraduate,' entitled 'A Scholar of his College.' The name would seem to indicate that university life is again the subject of Mr. Collins's observation.

The reception by the reviewers of Mr. J. M. Barrie's new book, 'Tommy and Grizel,' has been respectful rather than enthusiastic. Mr. W. L. Courtney, who reviewed it in the Daily Telegraph, practically contented himself with a sketch of the plot. The Times praised the Thrums scenes, but said that Mr. Barrie knows nothing of great dames, and that the book falls off when the action is transferred to London. The Daily Chronicle finds Grizel interesting and real, and Tommy uninteresting and unreal, and says that the story leaves one with a feeling of oppression. Other critics find fault with Mr. Barrie for telling so much about the characters instead of delineating them dramatically through action, and the majority find the end of Tommy unsatisfactory. The reviews have so far all been long, and most of them remarkably thorough.

In connection with the vexed question of cut versus uncut edges, Mr. Murray has devised a means by which all books can have open and yet not smooth cut foredge and tail; and this with no more cost than that of trimming as at present. The numberless letters he has received on the subject in connection with the announcements of the first number of the Monthly Review forced him to consider the question. The result is attained by the simple expedient of so 'imposing' that the 'bolts' fold out (instead of in as formerly) and are opened by the circular trimming knife acting in the usual way, but cutting off the closed bolts instead of the open edges.

Mr. John Long will issue at once Mr. G. B. Burgin's new story 'The Way Out.' It is a Canadian story, and deals with the ethics of suicide. The book is a more serious one than usual with Mr. Burgin, although not without lighter touches concerning rural life of fifty years ago.

Dr. Archibald Stodart Walker has had the idea of collecting the various 'Rectorial Addresses' delivered before the University of Edinburgh since 1859, and has edited a book under that title for publication on October 30 by Mr. Grant Richards. Among the rest are papers by Mr. Gladstone, Thomas Carlyle, Lord Derby, the Duke of Devonshire, Lord Rosebery, Lord Iddesleigh, and Mr. Goschen.

The Onlooker, of which the first number has reached us, is 'a Society paper,' and is full of the sort of literary pabulum on which Society is supposed to exist. There is gossip about 'smart' people and rich people, with something about current celebrities, Mr. Winston Churchill being the most prominent of the notables. The personal sketch of Mr. Churchill, which we suppose should be called an 'appreciation,' cannot be said to be well done. Books are not forgotten, and the Duchess of Sutherland, the Countess of Pembroke, and the Countess of Londesborough, give 'lists of the books which they have most enjoyed reading.' Why such lists are given we are not told. The names of Mrs. Craigie and Mr. W. L. Courtney, who also give lists, carry more conviction.

To celebrate the five-hundredth anniversary of Chaucer's death, the Governors of the Bishopsgate Institute have secured the services of Mr. Walter Slater, who will deliver a lecture on Tuesday, the 23rd, at seven o'clock, entitled 'From London to Canterbury with Chaucer's Pilgrims, in the Year 1385,' illustrated by numerous lantern slides.

'The Story of Ronald Kestrel,' by A. J. Dawson, which Mr. Heinemann is publishing, is the life of a writer of stories written by a man who is himself a story-writer. Mr. Dawson has lived and worked in many countries, and the varied experiences he has had in Morocco, Australia, and the Pacific Islands have given him his opportunity for casting the scenes and incidents of his story in those varied climes.

Mr. Samuel Gordon, author of 'Lesser Destinies,' a story of slum life which achieved considerable success last year, has finished his new novel entitled 'Sons of the Covenant.' The story is a study of the main characteristics which have helped the Jew to his position as an important factor in European society, and deals boldly with the chief communal questions agitating the mind of Anglo-Jewry. The book will be published on November 1 by Messrs. Sands & Co., who, three years ago, published Mr. Gordon's romance of modern Paris, 'In Years of Transition.'

In a recent number of the Author, Sir Walter Besant counselled young and unknown authors to hold their books back until the General Election in this country and the Presidential Election in America are over. Only the popular novelist, he says, can be sure of his readers in times of public excitement. Referring to this statement, a writer in the New York Times remarks that while what Sir Walter (the American calls him Mr. Besant) says may apply to England, it hardly applies to America. 'One thing is sure,' it is added, '"the new or little-known writer" may become popular here in times of public excitement much quicker than he does when things are merely drifting. It all depends upon his theme. It is the popular novelist who has not the sympathetic theme that is ignored in times of public excitement.' In this matter we are rather with Sir Walter Besant and against his American critic.

The volume on 'The Genius of Protestantism,' by Dr. M'Cheyne Edgar, of Dublin, published in the spring by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, having run through the first edition, the author has, in a preface to the second edition, now in the press, taken notice of various criticisms on his book. The new edition will be ready in a week or two.

Wilhelm Hauff, the celebrated German writer, who was a great admirer of Sir Walter Scott's works, many years ago wrote a story called 'Lichtenstein' in the hope that it would prove as popular in Germany as Sir Walter Scott's works in England. He rightly gauged the tastes of his countrymen, and this story is one of historic interest; and as it produced such a great sale in Germany, and also deals with the early history of the house of the Duke of Teck and the present Duchess of York, who is of the Teck family, Mr. Ernest Nister thought it might prove of interest to English readers, so the work of translating it was entrusted to Miss L. L. Weedon. It has been illustrated by Mr. T. H. Robinson, and it is very attractively got up. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of York has graciously accepted the dedication of this book.

'The Harp of Life' is the title of a new novel by Miss Elizabeth Godfrey, the author of 'Poor Human Nature,' which Mr. Grant Richards will publish on October 30. The book appears on both sides of the Atlantic.

The career of Sir Henry Acland, whose death is announced this week, was full of honours, professional and literary. Fifty-nine years ago he was elected to a Fellowship at All Souls, and four years later was appointed Lee's Reader in Anatomy. Taking his M.D. degree at Oxford in 1848, he was shortly afterwards elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians. In 1858 he was appointed to the Professorship of Medicine with which his name will always be associated. In 1851 he was made Radcliffe Librarian at Oxford, and he was also Curator of the University Galleries and the Bodleian Library. Of his many publications one of the earliest and most noteworthy was a work on 'The Plains of Troy.' He also wrote works on the Extension of Education in the University of Oxford, on the Cholera at Oxford, and a Biographical Memoir of R. C. Brodie, besides many contributions to various periodicals. Sir Henry was the recipient of numerous honours from universities and literary and scientific bodies.

The vagaries of artists are well exemplified in an illustration to Mrs. Ward's new novel 'Eleanor,' now appearing serially in Harper's Magazine. In the instalment printed in the current number Mrs. Ward says: 'Slowly Eleanor dragged herself higher in her chair; she pushed her hat back from her forehead,' &c. The artist seizes Eleanor in this interesting situation, but instead of giving her a hat he gives her something resembling a shawl about her head. This reminds us of a recent case in which a novelist had two of his characters engaged in a boxing match. He depicted them without gloves, but the artist drew them with gloves, and with gloves they appeared. When will artists take the trouble to read and remember what they are supposed to illustrate?

Attention should be directed to a very neat, excellently printed edition of the 'Essays of Elia (Second Series)' which Messrs. Macmillan have published. The volume is edited with notes by Professor N. L. Hallward, M.A., and an interesting introduction has been supplied by Mr. S. C. Hill. The requirements of Indian students, it may be mentioned, have been especially considered in this edition.

Mr. Heinemann will shortly publish the 'Studies in Style' which Mr. W. H. Helm recently contributed to the columns of the Morning Post.

In connection with the Semi-Jubilee of the Livingstonia Mission, Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier are bringing out a History of the Mission, entitled 'Daybreak in Livingstonia,' by James M. Jack, M.A., revised, with an introduction, by Dr. Laws. An up-to-date map of Central Africa, with portraits of Dr. Livingstone and Dr. Laws and many other illustrations, are included.

Mr. Hamlin Garland's new novel, 'The Eagle's Heart,' deals with the open-air life of a boy who dreams in his youth of the land beyond the mountains, and who tries his luck as a 'cow-puncher' out West. Mr. Garland, whose 'Rose of Dutchers Coolly' was favourably received some years ago, develops in his new novel the character of a sensitive boy who hates the narrowing influences of civilisation and fights against the conventions of his up-bringing as a minister's son.

Among Mr. Ernest Nister's forthcoming publications is a story entitled 'In Ælfred's Days,' by Mr. Paul Creswick. This has been illustrated by Mr. T. H. Robinson. The book should be particularly appropriate, as this story deals—as the title suggests—with the times of Alfred the Great, and next year the celebrations to the memory of Alfred the Great will take place. Mr. George Manville Fenn has also given Mr. Nister a story which is to appear in one of the E. N. series of Cloth Gift Books, under the title of 'Old Gold.' It deals with adventures in South America up some of the practically unknown rivers.

Under the title of 'The Bystander, or Leaves for the Lazy,' Messrs. Sands & Co. will publish immediately a volume containing about thirty papers on all kinds of topics by Mr. J. Ashby Sterry, author of 'The Lazy Minstrel,' 'A Tale of the Thames,' &c. The volume is not, as has been stated in some quarters, a selection from the author's 'Bystander' column in the Graphic.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. are publishing in their well-known 'Temple Classics' series an edition of the 'Critical and Historical Essays of Thomas Babington Macaulay.' Volume I. has now reached us, and it is admirably printed and bound. They have also added Hazlitt's 'Lectures on the English Comic Writers' to the same series.

CANADA'S NEW COPYRIGHT ACT.

The following is the text of the new Canadian Copyright Act passed at the close of the September session of the Canadian Parliament:—

1. If a book as to which there is subsisting copyright under the Copyright Act has been first lawfully published in any part of Her Majesty's dominions other than Canada, and if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Minister of Agriculture that the owner of the copyright so subsisting and of the copyright acquired by such publication has lawfully granted a license to reproduce in Canada, from movable or other types, or from stereotyped plates, or from electro plates, or from lithograph stones, or by any process for facsimile reproduction, an edition or editions of such book designed for sale only in Canada, the Minister may, notwithstanding anything in the Copyright Act, by order under his hand, prohibit the importation, except with the written consent of the licensee, into Canada of any copies of such book printed elsewhere; provided that two such copies may be specially imported for the bona fide use of any public free library, or any university or college library, or for the library of any duly incorporated institution or society for the use of the members of such institution or society.

2. The Minister of Agriculture may at any time in like manner, by order under his hand, suspend or revoke such prohibition upon importation if it is proved to his satisfa ction:

(a) The license to reproduce in Canada has terminated or expired; or

(b) The reasonable demand for the book in Canada is not sufficiently met without importation; or

(c) The book is not, having regard to the demand therefor in Canada, being suitably printed or published; or

(d) Any other state of things exists on account of which it is not in the public interest to further prohibit importation.

3. At any time after the importation of a book has been prohibited under section 1 of this Act, any person resident or being in Canada may apply, either directly or through a bookseller or other agent, to the person so licensed to reproduce such book, for a copy of any edition of such book then on sale and reasonably obtainable in the United Kingdom or some other part of Her Majesty's dominions, and it shall then be the duty of the person so licensed, so soon as reasonably may be, to import and sell such copy to the person so applying therefor at the ordinary selling price of such copy in the United Kingdom or such other part of Her Majesty's dominions, with the duty and reasonable forwarding charges added; and the failure or neglect, without lawful excuse, of the person so licensed to supply such copy within a reasonable time shall be a reason for which the Minister may, if he sees fit, suspend or revoke the prohibition upon importation.

4. The Minister shall forthwith inform the Department of Customs of any order made by him under this Act.

5. All books imported in contravention of this Act may be seized by any officer of Customs, and shall be forfeited to the Crown and destroyed; and any person importing, or causing or permitting the importation, of any book in contravention of this Act shall, for each offence, be liable, upon summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding $100.

The New York Publishers' Weekly has the following comments on the Act:—'Canada has in its new copyright law solved a vexed local problem by asserting the principle of territorial division of copyright. The law is operative only when the copyright owner (presumably whether author or publisher) of a book copyrighted within the British dominions sells a license for the reprinting of the work in Canada. The duty is then laid upon the Minister of Agriculture, who is the Canadian copyright officer, to prohibit the importation of other than the Canadian edition except for library and other educational bodies, and except when a private buyer requires from the Canadian publisher a copy of the English edition, which the latter is then required to import. This law, like other seemingly simple laws, puts upon the copyright officer an extraordinary burden of decision in the several exceptions scheduled. It is drawn with the purpose of avoiding conflict with the present English copyright law and with the imperial system, which is expected to become a law next year. If it works it will be effective in preventing the importations of editions made within the United States of English copyright books licensed for Canadian publication, and it will present to the English copyright owner, whether author or publisher, an inducement to territorialise the market with exactness, so that there should no longer be confusion in the publisher's mind as to whether a sale for the American market includes both the United States and Canada, or only the former. The law by its terms is specifically limited to books first published within the British empire, which is in line with the essential principle of British copyright.'

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. W. L. Thomas.

We are sorry to record the death of Mr. W. L. Thomas, founder and managing director of the Graphic, which took place on Tuesday at his residence at Chertsey. He was born on December 4, 1830, so that he was in his seventieth year. His career was artistic from the first. At eighteen he was articled to J. W. Linton, the wood-engraver, and when twenty started for himself. An artist of considerable ability, he exhibited at the shows of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, but his real work in life was accomplished in illustrated journalism.

He had been an engraver on the Illustrated London News, and forty-one years ago established the Graphic, which was immediately successful. Mr. Thomas has himself described the conditions under which he started the paper with which his name will always be associated. 'I was ready,' he said, 'for some big, interesting, far-reaching experience. And it was in this temper, and as an outcome of these circumstances, that I conceived the idea of and founded the Graphic. The originality of the scheme consisted in establishing a weekly illustrated journal open to all artists, whatever their method, instead of confining my staff to draughtsmen on wood, as had been hitherto the general custom. Added to this as an attraction, I hoped to enlist the services of writers of some literary distinction. Yet, for all that, it was a bold idea to attempt a new journal at the price of sixpence a copy in the face of the most successful and firmly established illustrated paper in the world, costing then only fivepence. I had, if I would carry out my darling scheme, to throw up an engraving business which commanded a good income. And yet, so strong, so vital, so compelling was the impulse within me that I cannot remember now if I hesitated. "Well, poor mariners take their chance"; I took mine!' Like most successful men, Mr. Thomas seized his opportunity when it arose, and the success of the Graphic is the best evidence of the soundness of his judgment. Ten years ago his energy found further scope by the establishment of the Daily Graphic, and some years later he brought out The Golden Penny, a weekly paper of the Tit-Bits order. Mr. Thomas's services to illustrated journalism were recognised by the French Government.

BRITISH RIGHTS IN AMERICAN BOOKS.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Sir,—Up to a recent date Stationers' Hall recognised entries by British publishers only. Hence American publishers had to arrange with a British house to enter their things simultaneously for them, and there was at least a show of simultaneous publication. For example, I always had a dozen copies of the work, and laid them on my counter on the day that the entry was made at Stationers' Hall, and at Washington.

Now, however, Stationers' Hall appears to be allowing American publishers to enter by post, direct. Thus there is no bona fide publication (i.e. exposure for sale) but merely an entry. It is a question whether this will stand in a Court of Law. In the U.S. entry at Washington confers copyright. A work which has not been entered at publication is non-copyright. Here, however, everything is copyright, entered or not, and entry is merely a formal preliminary to an action at law.

I am constantly buying British rights in American things, and want the rights to be secure. I don't know if Stationers' Hall is prepared to guarantee its new policy.

I am, &c.,

A Publisher.

SALE JOTTINGS.

The first important book sale of the autumn season took place at Messrs. Hodgson's Rooms in Chancery Lane last week. The following are some of the more important items:—Pyne's 'History of the Royal Residences,' 3 vols., large paper, coloured copy, £24 (Sabin); Burton's 'Arabian Nights,' without the supplement, 10 vols., £23 (Sotheran); Lever's novels, 37 vols., half morocco—£13. 15*s.* (Edwards); Scott's novels, 48 vols, 1859—£7 (Bumpus); Dickens's works, 30 vols.—£7 (Bain); 'Notes and Queries,' first four series, with indexes—£14. 10*s.* (George); Ackermann's 'Picturesque Tour of the Thames'—£7. 12*s.* 6*d.* (Thorp); Champlin & Perkins' 'Cyclopædia of Painters,' 4 vols., 1886—£9. 15*s.*; 'The Art of Bartolozzi,' 4 vols.—£6 (Parsons); Shaw's 'Dress and Decorations,' 2 vols., large paper—£6. 5*s.* (Hopkins); McIan's 'Scottish Highlands,' 2 vols.—£5. 15*s.* (Hill & Son); Guizot's 'History of France and England,' 11 vols.—£5. 6*s.* 6*d.* (Maggs); Bowyer's 'Triumphs of Europe,' &c., 4 vols.—£4. 12*s.* 6*d.*; Swift's works, 19 vols., 1883—£4. 17*s.* 6*d.* (Edwards); Vale Press: Suckling's poems and Apuleius' 'Cupide and Psyche,' 2 vols.—£4. 6*s.*; Cook's 'Observations on Fox-Hunting'—£5. 2*s.* 6*d.* (Spencer); Peacham's 'Valley of Varietie,' 1838, &c., in 1 vol.—£8. 5*s.* (Pickering); Eliot's 'Strength out of Weakness; or, Progress of the Gospel amongst the Indians in New England,' 1652, &c., in 1 vol.—£20. 10*s.* (Pearson).

THE DISCOUNT QUESTION IN AMERICA.

Readers on this side of the Atlantic will be interested in the following circular which has been sent by the American Publishers' Association to the retail trade of the United States:—

New York: October 1, 1900.

In order to learn the views of booksellers upon the question of prices and discounts, the American Publishers' Association would be glad to receive replies from the trade to the questions which follow, and it is requested that you answer them as fully as seems best to you. The Association desires to proceed in a conservative manner, and to create as little disturbance as possible. Such books as would be subject to the rules of the Association to be adopted would, of course, be protected by copyright, and the rates would apply only on books issued after a fixed date, to be agreed upon.

1. Would a system of absolute net prices, to be obtained throughout the country, be satisfactory to you?
2. Should all new copyright books be issued in this manner, at net prices, or in the beginning would it be better to make only certain classes of books—such as perhaps the more serious books—net, leaving novels and some other popular classes to be issued at regular retail prices as at present?
3. In case such a system of net prices is adopted, would it, in your opinion, be possible to absolutely guarantee this price to every purchaser of the book at retail, whether belonging to the clergy, professional, or other class hitherto specially favoured in the matter of discount (the only exception being in the case of libraries)?
4. If the publishers should exact postage upon books sent by mail, would this give the bookseller all the protection he could fairly demand against direct supply from the publisher?
5. Will you kindly say whether in your opinion a discount should be made to libraries, and, if made, whether 10 per cent. is enough for the purpose?
6. From the net prices as indicated above it is suggested that to bona fide booksellers carrying a stock of books a general discount of 25 per cent. be allowed, some shorter discount than this being allowed to all other dealers in books, provided, of course, that the price is never cut. Would this discount plan be satisfactory to you, and is the discount offered, in your opinion, sufficient for books that are sold to the public at the net prices?
   Extra discounts would be offered for quantity purchases, but for quantity purchases only, and with a view to making the purchaser of the larger quantity reserve himself a larger profit for his speculation.
7. Would you keep in stock such net books, the prices of which were maintained, so long as these books were [illegible] demand?
8. Would you agree absolutely to maintain such net prices, and would you agree in case the prices of such books were cut, not to cut them in return but to present the evidence to the Publishers' Association of such cutting of rates and allow the Publishers' Association thirty days in which to remedy the evil (i.e. the aforesaid cutting of prices) before cutting prices in rebuttal?
9. No penalty can probably be attached to the breaking of prices, excepting that the publishers will sell to dealers who break the prices of these net books only at the net price and without discount, and all booksellers will be asked to agree to a similar provision, viz. that they will not sell to dealers who cut prices except at the regular list prices, without discount. Do you think this provision would be sufficient to prevent the cutting of prices, and would you agree not to sell to dealers except at the list price, if you were informed by the Publishers' Association of any dealer so accused of cutting the prices?
10. Are you willing to join a Booksellers' Association, with nominal dues, which shall undertake through its committees to inform the Publishers' Association in regard to cases where the price of any book is cut, the Booksellers' Association, if formed, to pay the expenses of its own committees for the collection of such evidence in all cases where requested to do so by the Publishers' Association?

While it may appear that the questions as outlined above indicate a certain policy to be followed possibly by the American Publishers' Association, I am instructed to say that the direction of such action is not yet determined, and if therefore you should desire to outline a policy for the conduct of the business looking to the control of prices in some way or other, whether by the limitation of discount or otherwise, that would in your opinion answer the purpose (viz. the improvement of the conditions of the retail book trade) the Association will be most glad to have such outline of a plan from you, and will give it due consideration before taking action in the matter.

An early reply is respectfully requested, and a full answer to each question by referring to it by number particularly desired.

Yours respectfully,

George P. Brett, Secretary.

No. 66 Fifth Avenue.

THE YOUNGEST OF LONDON PUBLISHERS.

Mr. R. Brimley Johnson is the son of one of the oldest private schoolmasters in Cambridge, and spent his early life in close touch with University or College libraries, and with the well-known book-shop of his uncle, Mr. Robert Bowes. A somewhat serious illness interrupted his University course, and led to the adoption of no more definite profession than miscellaneous journalism and literary work. It was only a few years ago, when aged about thirty, that he came to town, and—as it were—began life in earnest.

Presumably the deadness of recent seasons accounts for the fact that though his first book was brought out as long ago as the beginning of July, Mr. Johnson is still the youngest of London publishers. His making the plunge at such a discouraging moment, again, may be due to his having been all along connected with books in other ways, and therefore feeling the change of work but little.

For in former days his name has appeared a little higher up on title-pages, as the editor of English reprints, chiefly of the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. His 'Jane Austen' (J. M. Dent & Co.) belongs to the period when that novelist's works were not on everyone's lists, and he was associated as editor with other of Mr. Dent's pioneer work; while to-day he has in course of publication a school edition of Shakespeare issued by Messrs. Blackwood, and a series of Modern Plays produced by Messrs. Duckworth.

As a publisher Mr. Johnson has shown the courage of conviction and taste. Opening with a volume of 'Two Stage Plays' by Miss Lucy Snowe—a new writer, whose strong work has been compared to Ibsen's—he next produced a collection of sincere and outspoken essays, entitled 'Liberalism and the Empire,' by three of the younger Academic Radicals who have maintained in their organ—The Speaker—so bold a front.

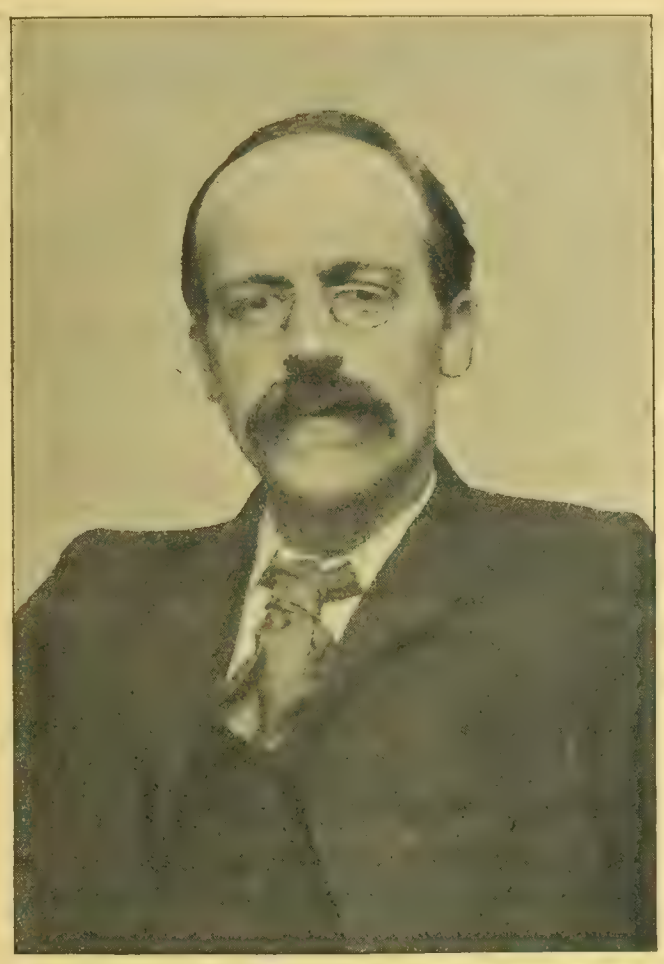
Catching the tail end of the khaki enthusiasm and the first moment of the election fervour, Mr. Johnson brought out the other day a little volume of topical verses by Mr. St. John Adcock, which had already attracted notice in the magazines. He has now ready for the Christmas season a very original volume of nonsense verses, in a gay cover, by a young artist-poet who has strung his own rhymes, penned his own sketches, and designed his own cover. 'Greybeards at Play,' by Gilbert Chesterton, should be widely welcomed. The author has published cartoons and verses in certain papers, and his name is appearing this autumn on the list of another young and enterprising publisher. A companion volume for younger children is 'Snowflakes and Snowdrops,' by Miss Annie Matheson, whose hymns (especially 'Jesus the children are calling') and collected volumes are known to all readers of religious poetry. Mr. Johnson has secured for this three sketches by Mr. F. Carruthers Gould, and numerous illustrations by Miss Winifred Hartley. He will also publish this year an 'Album of Drawings,' by Mr. James Guthrie, of the Glasgow School, who has hitherto produced his own work in that strange little periodical The Elf.

A new playwright, a new poet, two new illustrators! We may shake our heads over such rashness, but we cannot say it is just like all the rest. And Mr. Johnson's books are not startlingly cheap or extravagantly æsthetic. They are well produced in practical good taste.

It is early days, perhaps, to speak of plans as yet, and one seldom fulfils his intentions; but we understand that Mr. Johnson is proposing to avoid fiction, educational work, or reprints (with which he has other associations). He sets out to find new, or old, writers of poetry and plays; to reach those who care for thoughtful essays on politics, religion, philosophy, or ethics; to please the children; and to run limited editions of art reproductions.

But in every direction he will move slowly and resist the temptation of a crowded list.



MR. R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION.

Few more remarkable examples of the end of a Bohemian have come under our notice than that of the romance-writer Louis Chastang, as related in Le Temps of October 13.

'Louis Chastang was a little old man of eighty-six years, with a long white beard and singularly bright, keen eyes, who during the last two years was every afternoon seen by the dwellers on the left bank of the Seine trotting along towards the Sainte Geneviève Library or the bookstalls on the quays. He always returned with some fresh acquisitions. Since the end of last year he has been no more seen in the streets. From thenceforward he lived in his room without ever going out. But in what a room!

'It is on the third floor of a house in the Rue Condé. To reach it you pass through a narrow and winding passage. From the open door comes a whiff of foul air, which makes you involuntarily recoil, and you must conquer your repugnance before entering and inspecting the room, which is at the end of the passage, and measures about 10 feet by 8 feet. At the end is a window which has not been opened for three years; before the window a table loaded with old books, and in the very limited space around it a quantity of old papers. Here it was he wrote his romances. Quite close to the table stands a stump bed covered by a rug of an indefinable colour, almost black. There he slept, without undressing. Chastang had his linen washed once a year; he owned four shirts. And from the truckle-bed to the door, against the walls, on the floor, everywhere, are piles of old books tied in parcels.

'There it was that Chastang read and wrote. No one ever read his prose; his manuscripts, at his own request, accompanied him to the Hospital de la Charité, whither he himself has been sent by M. Lagaillarde, police commissary of the Odéon quarter. "Nobody shall see them until my death," he fiercely declared to the commissary. As for his books, he asserted that they were worth more than twelve thousand francs. I have some, he said, which will fetch two or three thousand francs! When his landlord recently gave him notice to quit, he summoned a priest from the great seminary and asked him to take care of his dear books during his illness. A truck full of them was taken to the seminary yesterday, but this has made no appreciable difference in the store.

'How he lived was rather a mystery. He received from the Assistance Publique 30 francs monthly. But he has been seen spending in one day thirty sous for wine and fifteen sous for rum. However, once a month he received a letter which never contained less than two bank notes of 50 francs. Sometimes, on opening the envelope, he would say to the concierge: "Look, there are three this time!" Occasionally four bank notes of the same value were sent by the donor, a rich Parisian lady.

'Thus furnished with money, he lived pretty well; but cavilled at the least expense. For twenty-five centimes he expected the concierge to make him a copious omelette of two eggs with potatoes and always complained of the small quantity of butter. "Yet I am conscientious," the woman said. "You are too fat to be conscientious," rejoined the man of letters. But after a while she refused to carry his food to him, being unable to endure the foul air of his den.

'"You are the only person who ever complained of a bad smell here," he remonstrated. That was true, for she was the only person who entered his room. In short, it was because he lived in such an atmosphere that he caught cold on the lungs and had to be taken to the hospital. An hour after his removal the commissary of police summoned the municipal officials to disinfect the chamber.'

Thus far the account of the octogenarian writer of romances, for whom a much prolonged existence is scarcely to be expected. We may, however, speculate as to the fate reserved for his unpublished fiction; wondering if, after their author's demise, a publisher will be found for romances produced in such surroundings. There have been ere now, and probably will be in the future, authors whose posthumous writings have been extraordinarily successful, but it would be unreasonable to expect from the pen of a Louis Chastang a rival in public favour to the 'David Harum' of Edward Noyes Westcott.

A DANIEL COME TO JUDGMENT.

We have had many sermons and not a few denunciations from would-be reformers of public taste in regard to reading. Fiction is of course the chief stumbling-block in the worthy reformer's way, and he shouts frantically to have it removed. The latest censor is the editor of Home and Country. His complaint is that when asked what the people read, 'the officials at public libraries say that the demand is not for history, biography, or science: but for the latest fiction. The bookstall keeper will inform you that what he chiefly sells is the "up-to-date" fiction of the most sensational character.' As names are not mentioned, we cannot tell whether or not Miss Marie Corelli, Mr. Anthony Hope, Mrs. Humphry Ward, and Mr. J. M. Barrie are included among the producers of up-to-date fiction.

The effect of education, so far as our critic can make out, is to turn young people aside from good authors. Thus when education was not the parrot cry it is now, young folks read Shakespeare and Bunyan, but it appears both have lost their attraction. Sad to relate, too, 'Scott, Lytton, Beaconsfield, Thackeray, Charles Reade, Charles Kingsley, and even Dickens are rapidly going out of fashion; but young people do know something of the last sensational play—containing three murders, two suicides, a forgery, a dynamite explosion, and three marriages, one by a gutter girl to a duke.'

Still sadder to relate, 'the old magazines are gradually being killed. Authors who obtained good remuneration for their artistic work find that good work does not pay. If they are to get reputation and money, and make a name in "society," they must write something outrageously wicked or idiotic, or "boom" the most recent fad, otherwise they are not considered "up-to-date." Thus genius is at the mercy of Mammon. A millionaire publisher brings out a new literary production with, say, 500,000 circulation. This kills ten of its competitors, each with a circulation of say 50,000. Each of these ten papers formerly employed say ten people on their literary and artistic staff—Will the new magazine take over all these workers? Will they have a hundred on their staff? No, possibly about twenty. So that eighty educated people with originality, genius, and ability will be turned adrift, and English literature be all the poorer for their loss. It may be said, "Can they not start other literary ventures?" No; they cannot compete because they have no money.

'It becomes a matter for the serious consideration of journalists and literary men, whether the literary and artistic talent of the members of the press shall be at the mercy of four or five rich men, who say to newspaper proprietors—"I will kill your publications"; who say to literary men—"I will hire your pens if you are willing to write what I dictate"; and who say to the public—"You shall not read anything which I do not provide; I will invade your family, your club, and your office; I will force myself on your attention. You shall buy my publications, and none other."

'Never was there a greater need for men of real genius and high moral character to devote themselves to literature. Yet never was the temptation greater to write trash, because it sells readily, and therefore pays. It is time that all literary men, in their own interests and in the interest of English literature, should look into this matter.

'What the historian at the end of the twentieth century will think of the publications which have had the largest sales it is hard to say. The paper on which they are printed is so bad, the illustrations so vile, and the whole thing so unworthy to be called literature, that possibly by that time there will not be a specimen remaining.

'Meantime let us support those publications which are doing good service, and help as far as we can to clear away "catch penny" rubbish, which is a reproach on the fair name of English common sense, morality, and culture.' We give these criticisms and expressions of opinion precisely for what they are worth.

ACCESS TO LIBRARY SHELVES.

Among English librarians there is considerable variety of opinion as to whether the public ought or ought not to have access to the shelves of large libraries. A well-known American librarian, Mr. S. S. Green, of Worcester, Mass., thinks that all classes ought to be admitted under supervision; none without. He thinks the wisest course would be to admit persons to sections under observation, and to provide in different rooms collections of new popular books, children's libraries and libraries of a few thousand volumes, containing standard and readable books on a large variety of subjects, for purposes of reference, which users may rummage among freely and yet under supervision.

The problem is very much simplified by dividing a library.

The division of the library, in the use of which observation of users is to be close, must be of considerable size, unless the library, although large, is, as is the case in some of the great cities of the country, made up almost entirely of popular literature.

He speaks from experience in this matter, for the Free Public Library of Worcester, Massachusetts, besides having three collections of books for persons to rummage among, has from the beginning had two departments, a reference library and a circulating library. In the reference library it is the custom to admit anybody who wishes to the shelves, accompanied by an attendant. The user may stay as long as he pleases, but he must not put back books which he takes down, and when he has rummaged long enough among the books of the class he is consulting, such books as he has selected for study are carried to a small study room and charged to him. The circulating library is undergoing classification at present. It is the intention to admit visitors to sections, under observation, but not under so close observation as in the case of the reference department, the books of which are generally expensive and often rare.

It may be remarked here, incidentally, that by having a department from which books are taken out with a little formality, the librarian is enabled to place choice editions of the more popular authors where they can be of use to students of literature because commonly to be found in when wanted, and in a condition of wholeness and cleanness to render their use profitable and comfortable.

While the greatest efforts should be made to be impartial in the conduct of a library, and while all portions should be unostentatiously looked after, it is evident that there are some users who will need to be watched more than others, but the persons who will need watching will be found in all classes, and where vigilance is relaxed it should be in the case of individuals, and not of classes of persons.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Samuel Bagster & Sons.—'Stones Rolled Away, and other Addresses to Young Men,' by Henry Drummond, LL.D., F.R.S.E. The personality of the late Professor Drummond was a very captivating one, and his reputation was such that his lectures invariably drew crowded audiences. The present course were delivered in America, mostly to students of Harvard University. They are distinguished by the earnest manner and pithy style which formed one of the greatest of the Professor's attractions. With a capability granted to few public lecturers, he always seemed to go direct to the hearts of his auditors, and the main path of his subject was swept perfectly clean of any confusing side issues. In listening to him you felt that he had something of importance to impress upon you, and that he intended to speak as simply and directly, and yet forcibly, as he possibly could. The earnest purpose of the man imparted to the short telling sentences a remarkable eloquence. Something of this no doubt is lost when the words are transferred to cold, passionless print, but readers, we are sure, will perceive a wonderful charm in these addresses. Their effect on the young man should be all for good, and tend to make him healthier, manlier, and more useful.

From Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons.—In their admirable series of 'British Anthologies' Messrs. Bell have now issued 'The Surrey and Wyatt Anthology, 1509–1547 A.D.' and 'The Goldsmith Anthology, 1745–1774 A.D.' Both volumes are edited by Professor Edward Arber, and they display the same excellent judgment in selection that we have commented upon when noticing previous contributions to the series. 'The Surrey and Wyatt Anthology' is principally made up of poems by Sir Thomas Wyatt, Howard Earl of Surrey, Gavin Douglas, Bishop of Dunkeld, Sir Thomas More, and the Rev. John Skelton, while in the 'Goldsmith Anthology' the leading versifiers who have been laid under contribution are Thomas Gray, William Shenstone, Robert Fergusson, John Cunningham, William Collins, David Garrick, and of course Oliver Goldsmith. In each volume the anonymous poems are very numerous. A good word should be said for the neat and appropriate 'get up' of these books.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Life in London; or, the Day and Night Scenes of Jerry Hawthorn, Esq., and his Elegant Friend, Corinthian Tom, in their Rambles and Sprees through the Metropolis,' by Pierce Egan. The reappearance of this memorable work carries the mind back many years. It was first published in 1821, and a new edition appeared forty-eight years afterwards, with a long chatty introduction by John Camden Hotten. The present volume is a reproduction of this edition, introduction and all. The book will come as quite a strange revelation to the present generation. That such extraordinary harum-scarum doings could take place will amaze them, and it is to be feared that their reverence for their ancestors will not be greatly increased. To the student of men and manners, however, the book will afford an instructive and ofttimes amusing picture of Bohemian life in London as it existed at the beginning of the century; while the elder man, whose memory will perhaps carry him to the fringe of the period depicted, will be pleasantly reminded of scenes and places that he may have heard his father speak of. Every class of society is explored, from the lowest to the highest, and a further interest is given to the volume by a reproduction of the original illustrations by I. R. and G. Cruikshank.

From the same.—'As Luck Would Have It,' by William Westall. When two relatives of the same name meet with a railway accident under such circumstances that they exchange their identity, and the one who survives, a commoner, is mistaken for the one who is killed, a nobleman, interesting developments may be expected to follow. Mr. Westall explains with considerable ingenuity how Lord Alwyn and Godfrey Alwyn come to be travelling by the same train, and in adjoining carriages, and how, after changing compartments, the railway smash leaves the surviving relative with every evidence of his cousin's identity on his person. It should be stated, however, that Godfrey Alwyn for a long time after the accident remains unconscious, and that when he recovers his memory is completely shattered, so that his deception is scarcely premeditated, and as a matter of fact he is practically forced into it by the mother and sister of the dead man, who are convinced of his identity. The mistake, however, gives rise to a number of very curious complications, and in the unravelment of these Mr. Westall has shown his customary skill and dexterity. The story is lively and interesting, and can safely be recommended for an evening's amusement.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Paisley.—'Poems of Life and Work,' by Robert H. Calder. Most of these poems are written in the Scotch dialect, and they have that homeliness and unaffected directness which is so characteristic of minstrelsy across the border. We can scarcely say they are of exceptional merit, but they at least possess a simple charm that will appeal to a large number of readers. Perhaps the following extract will best indicate their character:—

> O Scotland, when I think forget—
> The gems which thy rocks fill,
> The lochs' worth, which lingers yet
> Around thy every vale and hill,
> The [illegible] will,
> The [illegible]
> [illegible]
> My [illegible]

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'Some Reminiscences of the War in South Africa,' by Earl de la Warr. The literature appertaining to our conflict with the Transvaal and Orange Free State has now assumed somewhat overwhelming proportions, but it may at least be said that Earl de la Warr's contribution comes to us in a very modest, unassuming form. We, as usual, accompany the writer on board the outgoing steamer, 'The Dunottar Castle,' are initiated into the life of the passengers, arrive at Capetown, and in due course proceed to the front. The most interesting portions of the book are those which relate the author's personal experiences as a soldier and the great battles in which he took part. For some time the author served in Colonel Bethune's Mounted Infantry, and, as can well be imagined, had many thrilling adventures. His little book will compare favourably with others of more pretentious appearance on the same subject.

From Messrs. Isbister & Co.—'The Half-Hearted,' by John Buchan. The homely, unaffected story has often a power of enthraldom over the reader's mind not possessed by the novel of sensational incident. So it is with this book. Not by any means that Mr. Buchan's work is sluggish in tone or wanting in vivacity of narration, but as a rule he deals with the more reflective side of human nature, and his story displays a knowledge of character in many varied aspects. The concluding scenes of the story are laid among quite adventurous surroundings, and in its general tendency it is certain to command interest.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. 'The Blessing of Esau: a Romance of the Marshlands,' by Frank Savile. There is a fine ring of martial ardour in this story, and all the men characters are distinguished by a brave, warlike spirit. In his early days Prince Otho, heir to the crown of Illuria, had got married, to the great displeasure of his father it would seem, for the successors to the throne were always expected to marry a daughter of Islam, and in this way to secure the good services of the Sultan. However, the Duke exercised a very speedy method of readjustment; having invited the Princess to his Court, he caused her to be poisoned. This caused a bitter degree of enmity on the Prince's part, which was never assuaged during his father's lifetime. But a son was left, and on Otho's accession to the throne he naturally becomes the heir. Otho, however, determines to part with him—the secret of his parentage is not generally known—for he now understands how deep and absorbing was his father's devotion to Illuria, and is minded to emulate it. So the lad goes forth, accompanied by his godfather, a Scotch soldier, whose actual offspring he has always been supposed to be. Such briefly are the opening incidents of Mr. Savile's story, and the later events prove of a most absorbing and stimulating character. The author throughout has excellently adapted himself to the spirit of the times, and his romance possesses every element that should conduce to its success, not forgetting the very necessary love interest.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Rue with a Difference,' by Rosa Nouchette Carey. The quiet, thoughtful style of the author comes out very prominently in this story, and the reader is led along with no remarkable strain on his emotions from the opening page to the last. The delineations of character are clear and well defined, worthy in every way of the reputation the author has achieved in the past. Readers who can appreciate a thorough work of fiction, destitute of all affectation and theatrical tinsel, genuine in feeling and true to real life, may be safely recommended to purchase Miss Carey's book.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Footsteps of a Throne: being the Story of an Idler and of his Work; and of what he did in Moscow in the House of the Exile,' by Max Pemberton. Though we can scarcely compliment Mr. Pemberton on his happy selection of a title, we have every praise for the story itself. It opens with striking animation at a house in Grosvenor Square, where nearly all the leading characters are introduced, and their first appearance is of such a nature as thoroughly to stamp their respective individualities on the reader. Thus Mr. Pemberton at once accomplishes what is often one of the most difficult tasks of the novelist. He next takes us to Moscow, and the details of the plot are gradually unfolded. Practically the interest centres in the love of Lord Dane, an English nobleman, for the Princess Fekla, one of a somewhat notorious Russian family upon whom the suspicions of the government have fallen. There is a fine spirit of romance in the actions of the young aristocrat which is certain to capture the interest of readers, and the picture of his boldly throwing himself for love and beauty into the dangers of Russian intrigue is absorbing in the extreme. Occasionally we may question, like his more sober-minded friends, the judiciousness of the course that he pursues, and occasionally we may wonder whether the merits of the fair lady altogether warrant his heroic deeds, but there is little doubt that the book supplies most attractive reading. We can cordially recommend 'The Footsteps of a Throne' to all who appreciate a good love story, characterised by plenty of stirring incident and a capital flavouring of adventure.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Life of Sir John Fowler, Engineer, Bart., K.C.M.G., &c.,' by Thomas Mackay, with illustrations. The late Sir John Fowler was during a great part of his career more in the public eye than is generally the lot of an engineer of equal eminence. Hard work and good fortune made him what he was, and it is right that the history of his strivings and achievements should be related in a form at once permanent and accessible to the general public. The story of his career is well told by Mr. Mackay, who has been able to make use of family documents not open to any other biographer. The account of Sir John Fowler's early years and of his independent start in business is particularly interesting. It will fire young engineers, and indeed young men of all callings, to high aspirations and steady perseverance in realising dreams of ambition. Nothing about Fowler was more remarkable than his ability to seize opportunities, and turn difficulties to advantage. He would have been successful in any career, and in the career he chose he was of course pre-eminently successful. The story Mr. Mackay has to tell is one of constant triumphs in London, in Egypt, and finally in Scotland in connection with the Forth Bridge. One of the best chapters in the book, indeed, describes that wonderful bridge, surely one of the greatest engineering feats of the century on either side of the Atlantic. Very interesting and in some ways unexpectedly illuminative is the account of Fowler's work in Egypt. Outside his profession it won the praise of Lord Wolseley, and inside the profession of course attracted much attention. While Mr. Mackay wisely dwells on the engineering triumphs of his subject, he does not neglect the social side. We see Fowler at his work and among his friends, and the picture is a very agreeable one. He had social gifts and the opportunity to use them. Consequently in these pages there is a good deal about his private tastes, relaxations, and pleasure. The book is illustrated by a series of portraits, and is handsomely got up. To the engineering profession it must prove a work of exceptional interest, and the general reader will find in it the life story of a remarkable man.

From G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'William Watson Andrews: a Religious Biography, with Extracts from his Letters and other Writings,' prepared by his brother, Samuel J. Andrews. This is a volume that will chiefly appeal to English readers by reason of its relation to religious belief in America. Not that Mr. Andrews was altogether unknown in England, for he visited this country on several occasions. His biography, however, will be mainly attractive by reason of the light that it throws on the life of a good, earnest man who passed through much hostility and condemnation, and yet persevered in the work that he considered right. By most people, clergymen and laymen alike, he was looked upon as a sincere and well-meaning man with enthusiastic and fanciful notions about the Church, its original constitution and present evil condition, which did not call for any immediate or serious attention. The account of his life and opinions will be found extremely interesting.

From Messrs. Sands & Co. (Paris: Clarke & Co.)—'Clarke's Pocket Paris: a Practical Guide to Routes, Hotels, Galleries, Restaurants, Theatres, &c.,' edited and compiled by Meadeb. This, so far as we can gather from a consultation of its pages, is a very useful little book, and one of its chief recommendations is that the information is always conveyed simply and concisely, so that the inquirer is not troubled with any fine descriptive writing, which, though interesting enough in itself, is out of place in a work of this description. The volume is supplied with several plans, tables, &c.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'The Marble Face,' by George Colmore. It is a little difficult to imagine any woman so relentless and unfeeling as the main influencing character of Mr. Colmore's novel, the owner of the 'marble face' spoken of. On the other hand, the son against whom her hatred is shown is most extraordinarily weak, a poor helpless indeterminate being whose presence outside a lunatic asylum is equally a subject for wonder. He is supposed to have killed his brother, and in this way incurred his mother's resentment, and perhaps the fact of her having doomed him to seclusion may to some extent account for his mental state. However, even a melancholy appearance apparently has its compensating advantages, for in this instance it procures for Sir Darnley Cotterell the love of a resolute, go-ahead girl, whom he accidentally meets in one of his walks. With a woman's swift intuition she at once perceives that there is a mystery at the back of his sad, appealing face, and she determines to probe the matter to the bottom and rescue him. More than once, however, she is nearly baffled in her design by the helplessness of the victim, who is quite powerless in the hands of his mother, and, strangely enough, worships her despite all the cruel treatment he has received. Eventually the mystery is cleared up, and how it could have existed for so long forms a further marvel of the story. Still the narrative is interesting after its fashion, and would have been even more so had the author only supplied one character with whom the reader could have had genuine sympathy. The young lady rescuer is hardly strong enough, and, besides, she loses in attraction from falling in love with such a complete noodle of a man.

From the same.—'Shakespere's Predecessors in the English Drama,' by John Addington Symonds. New edition. Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. are doing students of literature a real service in issuing at a cheaper price J. A. Symonds's works. Some time ago they brought out new editions of 'The Renaissance in Italy' and 'Sketches and Studies in Italy and Greece'; and now comes the present volume, which to English readers is in many respects the most interesting and suggestive of all its author's writings. After all that critics like Mr. Swinburne and Professor Dowden have written about the drama, Symonds's work remains fresh and well worth studying. The publishers have produced the book with the good taste for which they are distinguished.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Half Hours in Japan,' by the Rev. Herbert Moore. The reader will obtain much interesting information respecting the manners, customs, social life, civil and religious rites, &c., of the Japanese from this unpretentious volume. Many people will also find an additional attraction in the pleasant agreeable style of the writer. Mr. Moore was for some time a missionary in Japan under the auspices of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and from this fact some idea of the general character of his book may be inferred. The numerous illustrations give an increased interest to the letterpress.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'On the Structure and Distribution of Coral Reefs,' by Charles Darwin, with illustrations, and a critical introduction by Professor John W. Judd. Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have done well to re-issue in a handy form Darwin's work on 'Coral Reefs' which was added to the Minerva Library under the editorship of the late T. G. Bettany. The print is rather small, but it is clear.

From Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.—'To Pay the Price,' by Silas K. Hocking. With original illustrations by Arthur A. Dixon. The great success of Mr. Hocking's stories is one of the most striking facts in contemporary literary history. Possibly the chief reason for his popularity is the refreshing frankness with which he writes of average human nature for the average reader. There is no break in his narrative, it runs trippingly on; and the conversations are for the most part exactly what we hear in real life. His tales have thus an air of reality which, as a rule, we miss in writers more prone to intellectual fireworks. The present book exhibits his well-known qualities of style and gifts of characterisation. There is a noble Earl without aristocratic distinction who has been married as a commoner to a pretty girl of the plebeian class, who died one week after giving birth to a baby boy. The child, too, was reported dead, but in later years is found to be alive, having grown up into a fine, vigorous young man. Unfortunately he is serving a sentence of two years' imprisonment with hard labour for the offence of forging the Earl's signature to a cheque, the real culprit being the man who has brought him up as his son. A crucial part of the plot turns on this incident, of which the author has made the most. For the development of the plot and the fate of the characters as a whole we must refer our readers to the book itself. Mr. Hocking's works, as we have said, attract a large number of readers. The reason for this is apparently due to the very simplicity of the style, and the bright attractive energy with which the story is related. In these attributes the latest of his novels will certainly not be found wanting.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

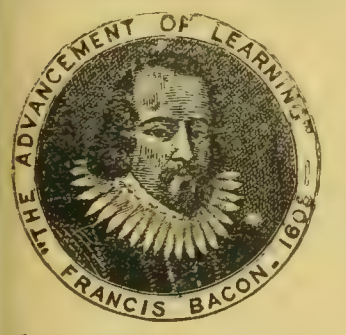
IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the



Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

'The book contains a very great deal that is not only new but excellent in idea and in detail. . . . The tendency of the book is to make the youthful student self-reliant and to increase his mental capacity for figures. . . . It is one of the most complete school arithmetics in existence.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE, July 27, 1899.

THE FOURTH EDITION OF

JACKSON'S PRACTICAL ARITHMETIC

Enlarged by the addition of over ONE THOUSAND NEW QUESTIONS (with Answers).

Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 460 pp. price 4s.

In issuing a Fourth Edition of this valuable work, the Publishers would direct the attention of teachers not only to the many unique features which render it so superior as a text-book for Middle and Upper Forms, Candidates for Examinations, and Students in Training, but to the addition and inclusion of over One Thousand new questions from Oxford and Cambridge Papers and other sources, which brings the grand total to upwards of EIGHT THOUSAND EXAMPLES, and to the fact that the work 'contains a great deal that they may search all existing text-books for in vain.'

'I have used your Arithmetic in the upper divisions of this school for some years, and can with confidence speak of its great value as a class-book. It quite fulfils all that you state concerning it.'—ISABELLA MULVANY, B.A., Headmistress, Alexandra School, Dublin.

'In his "Practical Arithmetic" Mr. Jackson displays an originality and power which raise the treatment of this subject quite out of the ordinary dull routine into an atmosphere of intense intellectual activity. No book on this subject so suggestive for the teacher has appeared in our time.'—DAVID ROSS, M.A., B.Sc., LL.D., Principal, Church of Scotland Training College, Glasgow.

H.M. INSPECTORS AND TEACHERS:
'I will recommend it as superior to any text-book at present in use.'
'It has no rival.'
'I have learned much from it that I never saw before.'
'The section on fractional arithmetic surpasses anything hitherto produced.'
'We have had no failure in public examinations since using your book.'

'We have been unable to find any single one of the new methods which we do not conscientiously prefer to the old ones generally in vogue.'
'Decidedly superior in most respects to books hitherto in use.'—MORNING POST. EDUCATIONAL TIMES.
'It is one of the clearest, completest, and most concise books of arithmetic produced within recent years.'—NORTHERN WHIG.
'This is one of the very best arithmetic books we have seen.'—ABERDEEN JOURNAL.

The Greatest Book on African Travel and Sport ever published, being an account of the first traverse of the Dark Continent from South to North.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE GUINEA NET.

From the Cape to Cairo

THE FIRST TRAVERSE OF AFRICA FROM SOUTH TO NORTH.

By EWART S. GROGAN and ARTHUR H. SHARP.

With Introductory Letter from the Right Hon. CECIL RHODES.

In 1 vol. crown 4to. Fully Illustrated by Drawings by A. D. McCORMICK (from Sketches made by E. S. GROGAN), Original Drawings by E. S. GROGAN, Photographs and Photogravure Portraits of the Authors, Maps, &c.

The hitherto unexplored country between Tanganyika and the Mountains of the Moon is dealt with at length; the chain of high volcanoes, two of which are active, was thoroughly explored; 700 miles of new country were mapped; and the total distance of the actual journey was 6,500 miles.

THE BOOK OF THE MOMENT.

The Renascence of South Africa. By ARCHIBALD R. COLQUHOUN, Author of 'China in Transformation'; formerly Administrator of Mashonaland, South Africa. In 1 vol. crown 8vo. with Map, price 6s.

A popular account of South Africa. The lessons to be learnt from its past and its future possibilities. A concise description of the physical conditions in the various territories, and of the peoples, native and otherwise. A consideration of the best methods of developing the country and of the Problems of Settlement.

A SPLENDID BOOK ON SPORT IN INDIA.

Now Ready, in 1 vol. demy 8vo. with 59 Illustrations and 3 Maps, 16s. net.

Wild Sports of Burma and Assam. By Colonel POLLOCK (late Staff Corps) and W. S. THOM (Assistant Superintendent of Police, Burma).

The illustrations for this work are principally from photographs, and are quite unique as a collection of sporting pictures, most of them having been taken while the authors were on their various hunting expeditions.

NEW AND INTERESTING BOOK OF TRAVEL.

Now Ready, in 1 vol. demy 8vo. with 90 Illustrations, after Drawings and Photographs by the Author, price 12s. net.

Among the Women of the Sahara. By Mme. JEAN POMMEROL. Translated by Mrs. ARTHUR BELL (N. D'Anvers), Author of 'The Elementary History of Art' &c.

The Author has given the results of her experience in a series of very vivid word-pictures, supplemented by sketches and photographs taken under great difficulties, for the women of the Sahara look upon the camera as an uncanny sentient being with the power of the evil eye, and, moreover, they consider it a positive crime to allow their portraits to be taken.

The Publishers' Circular

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.

October 26, 1900.

The opening of the autumn season brings not only a rush of fiction, but also a large number of reprints of standard works. Among these perhaps the most notable is the new issue of Lockhart's magnificent 'Life of Scott' which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have just added to their 'Library of English Classics.' In a bibliographical note Mr. A. W. Pollard explains that the text of the present edition is taken from that of 1839, published in ten volumes, 'but, in order to make it as complete as possible, the abridgment of 1848 has also been consulted, and at the end of each volume will be found a note of alterations made in 1848, but which Lockhart himself never incorporated into the larger work.' These editorial notes are of great interest and value, inasmuch as they explain obscure or ambiguous passages concerning persons who were still alive or had recently died when the work was first published. Scott's celebrity was so great and his affairs towards the end were so tragically involved that he was closely associated with people who, sixty years ago, had for various reasons to be referred to under an asterisk. The necessity for such reserve no longer exists, and Mr. Pollard has done well in giving actual names and other personal particulars to aid the latter-day reader. In the last volume there is also given an appendix, a chronological list of Scott's publications, beginning in 1796 with translations from the German and ending in 1831 with 'Count Robert of Paris' and 'Castle Dangerous.' Another feature of importance is an admirable index, which we have tested and found practically complete. Of the get-up of the series we have already spoken, but it will not be amiss to remind intending purchasers again that the print is beautifully clear and the binding handsome and substantial. All lovers of literature owe Messrs. Macmillan a real debt for publishing at a popular price this fine edition of one of the greatest and most engrossing biographies in any language. Yet another welcome volume from the same publishers is that containing 'Two Essays on Old Age and Friendship,' translated from the Latin of Cicero by Mr. E. S. Shuckburgh, which forms the latest addition to the admirable 'Golden Treasury' series.

Notwithstanding the many editions of Dickens's works already in existence there is room for yet another, especially when it is so well produced as the 'Authentic Edition,' of which Messrs. Chapman & Hall have issued the first volume. A start is of course made with the 'Pickwick Papers,' and the book is an exceedingly agreeable example alike of the printers' and the binders' art. The paper, too, is good, and the illustrations are reproduced with great care. Of the general scheme of this new edition of novels which enjoy a perpetual vogue we have already given full particulars, so that at present we need only recommend lovers of Dickens to see the new issue and judge for themselves. We venture to predict they will not be disappointed. A reprint of a different kind, but equally welcome, is the pocket edition of 'Tennyson, his Mind and Art,' by Stopford A. Brooke, which Messrs. Isbister & Co. have brought out in two volumes. It is charmingly got up, and cannot fail to appeal to book lovers. The same remark applies with equal force to the lovely pocket edition of 'Lorna Doone' which Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have issued. Mr. Blackmore's masterpiece sells in all forms and at all prices; but we fancy this new edition on India paper will more than rival in popularity any of the preceding issues. A more charming birthday or Christmas gift it would be hard to imagine. Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons continue the publication of Thackeray's works, in their delightful 'New Century Library,' the latest addition being 'Burlesques'; and classic after classic is being added to Messrs. Dent's 'Temple Classics' series—a series now happily beyond the need of praise.

These and other reprints of masterpieces in every department of literature prove, if proof were necessary, that somewhere in these islands there are still readers with a taste for good books. This is said to be the age of journalism, and certainly in no previous period were there so many journals of varying kinds, from the 'bits' order for the illiterate to the aristocratic morning paper for the clubman and the squire. At the same time it is true that the demand for books is greater now than it ever was before. The larger proportion of reading matter furnished by booksellers and librarians is of course fiction, a fact which we do not at all regret, seeing that so much of it is of good quality. With the fiction go other books long tried and of acknowledged excellence, and these also are bought in considerable numbers.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The work on 'Napoleon' which Lord Rosebery is said to have had in hand for twelve years will be published on November 2 by Mr. A. L. Humphreys, of Piccadilly. The volume deals especially with Napoleon's residence as a prisoner at St. Helena, but it also contains a general estimate of the Emperor's character.

Lord Kelvin will deliver a valedictory address to the Mathematical Society 'On the Transmission of Force through a Solid.'

Mr. Murray will issue immediately 'A Sea King's Midshipman,' by Mr. A. Lee Knight.

Early next month Messrs. Longmans & Co. will publish the second volume of Sir William Hunter's 'History of British India.' The first volume, it will be remembered, ended with the overthrow of the English in the Spice Archipelago in 1623, and the new volume takes up the narrative at this point and carries the record up to the time of the union of the old and new Companies under the Earl of Godolphin's award (1708). Sir William was engaged on the work up to a very few days of his death, and practically all that he left uncompleted was the ninth chapter. Amongst his papers, however, was an outline of this, and under the directions thus indicated it has been finished by other hands. We understand that Mr. F. H. Skrine, late of the Bengal Civil Service, is preparing a life of Sir William Hunter.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus announce a book by Major Pond, the American lecture agent, on the 'Eccentricities of Men of Genius.' As Major Pond has had most of the literary celebrities of the last generation through his hands, the book, if candid, ought to be interesting.

We have been much struck by the wording of an announcement relating to one of Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s new books. This is entitled 'The Passing of the Dragon,' a title which is sufficient in itself to arouse attention. But then follow the headings of the different chapters which are even more startling. 'There is no God'—'Beyond'—'The Burning Bush'—'The Devil is Dead.' We shall look forward with interest to the coming of this book. The author calls himself 'F. Jay Ceagh,' a name which, we believe, hides the identity of one well known in literary circles.

'In the Web of a War'—under which title Mr. H. F. Prevost Battersby relates his experience with Lord Roberts' army—contains, in addition to much new matter, the sketches of campaigning which attracted such attention when they appeared in the Morning Post. Mr. Battersby has had a military training, and the volume contains a searching criticism of almost every department in the service. The book will be issued by Messrs. Methuen very shortly.

Among the new books about to be issued from the Oxford University Press are 'The Oxford Book of English Verse, 1250–1900,' poems chosen and edited by A. T. Quiller-Couch, in two sizes, one edition being on Oxford India paper; 'An English Miscellany,' presented to Dr. Furnivall in honour of his seventy-fifth birthday, and contributed to by some fifty people in this country and abroad on philology and early English literature; and 'Studies in Foreign Literature,' being the Taylorian Lectures, 1889-99, delivered by S. Mallarmé, W. Pater, W. P. Ker, H. Brown, A. Morel Fatio, E. Dowden, F. W. Rolleston, W. M. Rossetti, P. Bourget, C. H. Herford, and H. Butler Clarke.

Notwithstanding the high prices paid to authors who have made a name and manage to keep it, the position of the less fortunate ones seems to become increasingly difficult. We have before us a case in which a new story by a writer who some years ago had a decided vogue has been offered for exclusive publication in a paper reserving three counties as its area, one of the counties being the most populous in England outside of London, at—what figure do our readers suppose? They are not likely to guess, so we will name it: it was £5. The story, it may be mentioned, runs to nearly 100,000 words, and is offered at the figure we have named not by a syndicate, but by a firm of publishers. Is it prudent to cut prices in this way? The story that is worth only £5 for serial rights in three counties is worth nothing at all, for the story that is worth anything is worth more than £5 for such an area. We confess we were a good deal surprised when particulars of the case under consideration were placed before us, and we cannot believe that business done on a principle of unreasonable or indiscriminate cutting is to the advantage of either author or publisher.

Last week Dr. Watson (Ian Maclaren) was the guest of the Whitefriars Club. The topic of conversation was the Scot in fiction, and in dealing with it Dr. Watson was wholly delightful. He is a capital raconteur, and the stories he told in illustration of Scottish life and character evoked peals of laughter. Dr. Robertson Nicoll and the Rev. Alexr. Connell, the able minister of Regent Square Presbyterian Church, were among the speakers. Mr. Arthur Spurgeon, the energetic and resourceful secretary, has infused the Whitefriars Club with new life. The weekly gatherings are now probably the pleasantest of their kind in London.

The next issue in Messrs. Macmillan's 'Library of English Classics' will be Thomas Shelton's translation of 'Don Quixote' in three volumes. Shelton's version of Cervantes, made in 1607 (the first part), was the first in other tongues, and its vogue is vouched for by the fact that original copies are among the rarest treasures of a library. His later rivals have been more accurate, as Mr. Pollard, who edits the series, admits, but none has attained in a strange tongue to Shelton's racy handling of the wonderful burlesque.

In the coming spring Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish 'The Life of Richard Cobden,' by the Right Hon. John Morley, M.P., in his 'Reformer's Bookshelf'; and also in the same series Mr. Collett's 'Taxes on Knowledge.' Both of these works are issued in two volumes.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons will shortly publish a work on 'The Cinque Ports: a Historical and Descriptive Record,' by F. Madox Hueffer. A prominent feature of the volume will be a number of photogravure plates and other illustrations from drawings by Mr. William Hyde, among the more noticeable subjects being Dover, Rye, New Romney and Marsh, and the gateway at Battle Abbey.

Mr. Thomas Holmes's volume of 'Pictures and Problems from London Police Courts' contains the reminiscences of a man who has devoted his whole life to his fellow-creatures. In constant attendance at the police courts for many years, he has come in contact with many apparently hopeless cases, and the depth of degradation revealed to him is often astounding and shocking. The volume will be published next week by Mr. Edward Arnold.

Mr. Murray's statement that he has invented a new means of cutting the edges of books, by which the fore-edge and tail are left rough, thus retaining the appearance of being uncut, has attracted a good deal of attention. We now learn that Messrs. Methuen have for nearly three years been using this method. All the works of fiction issued by them have been treated in this way, and also many books of a more serious character.

In order to make his annual volume on 'All the World's Fighting Ships' as accurate and up-to-date as possible, Mr. Fred T. Jane proposes to issue at intervals of ten weeks a list of 'corrections and addenda.' 'All the World's Fighting Ships' is published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

Messrs. Sands & Co. announce for immediate publication four novels by Mr. Charles Garvice. They are entitled 'Her Heart's Desire,' 'Nance,' 'The Outcast of the Family,' 'A Coronet of Shame,' and have had and are still having an enormous sale in America, where more than 250,000 volumes have already been sold, the sale of 'Her Heart's Desire' alone amounting to over 100,000 copies. The scenes in each case are laid in England, and the incidents deal largely with English society.

Mr. Arnold-Forster's new work, 'The War Office, the Army, and the Empire,' with a preface by the Earl of Rosebery, will be published on Wednesday next by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are bringing out a volume of biographies under the title 'Hero-Patriots of the Nineteenth Century,' by Mr. Edgar Sanderson. Although the author has selected many men who have been noted fighters for national freedom, many of the 'Lives' to be found in this volume will be new reading to the majority of English readers.

Messrs. Macmillan have included in their 'Golden Treasury' series a reprint of 'Miscellanies,' by Edward FitzGerald, which should form a companion volume to the widely circulated edition of the famous 'Rubaiyat.' It includes the Memoir of Bernard Barton, the Quaker poet, originally prefixed to an edition of Barton's 'Letters and Poems' in 1849; to this Mr. Aldis Wright (the editor) appends notices of Barton's death and funeral, contributed by FitzGerald to the Ipswich Journal—one of them containing memorial verses—'Euphranor,' the well-known dialogue, and the scarcely less familiar preface to Polonius. Besides these these are a notice of the Rev. George Crabbe, son of the poet, which FitzGerald wrote for the Gentleman's Magazine in 1857; preparatory 'Data' for the Life of Charles Lamb; and the last work of FitzGerald's pen, his introduction to 'Readings in Crabbe.' The only other prose piece is a good-natured parody of Sir Arthur Helps; but the volume concludes with three short occasional poems, which have hitherto only been printed for very limited private circulation.

The sad death of George Dolby in Fulham Infirmary last week recalls the famous readings in England and America which many consider were the means of sending Charles Dickens to an early grave. Dolby had succeeded Arthur Smith—the brother of Albert Smith, of Mont Blanc renown—as Dickens's secretary, and it was he who had the management of these tours. He accompanied Dickens everywhere, and looked after his bodily welfare as well as his monetary interests. His impressions of the novelist, together with an account of the abuse that was heaped upon himself, the tricks resorted to by speculators, and many other things of a like kind were set down by Dolby in a book which he called 'Charles Dickens as I Knew Him,' and which Mr. Fisher Unwin published. A new edition of this book is issued by Mr. Unwin this week.

Under the general title of 'The Complete Library,' Messrs. Gowans & Gray, of Glasgow, announce the publication in monthly volumes of the works of standard authors. Each volume will consist of some 250 pages, uniformly printed on fine paper from large type, and neatly bound in cloth. A feature of the undertaking is that the works will be issued unabridged and complete, and authors who have made their name in foreign literatures will also be included. The first publication of the series will be 'The Complete Works of John Keats, including his Letters,' edited by H. Buxton Forman. This will be issued in five volumes, the first being due on December 1.

Mr. Henry Bolton, of Hull, has issued an attractive catalogue of second-hand books, including many illustrated works of topography, art, botany, architecture, voyages, travels, and history. A number of volumes of biography and general literature recently purchased from a gentleman's library are also included. Readers will find this catalogue well worthy of their attention.

A work that should be of great service to Government officials, town clerks, merchants, bankers, brokers, and those whose business brings them in intimate relationship with the preparation of statistics, is announced by Messrs. P. S. King & Son, of Westminster, for publication next month. It is entitled 'Elements of Statistics,' the writer being Mr. Arthur L. Bowley, M.A., Lecturer in Statistics at the London School of Economics and Political Science. The volume is intended to supply a text-book dealing with the methods and principles of statistics recognised by statistical experts or used by official statisticians. The methods by which accurate statistics can be corrected are examined and illustrated, and the technique of statistical representation discussed.

In the review of Professor Arber's 'British Anthologies' in our last issue we inadvertently attributed their publication to Messrs. George Bell & Sons. It should of course have been Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press, and we now hasten to make the correction. The 'British Anthologies,' when completed, will consist of ten volumes, extending over four centuries, 1400–1800. Eight of the series have been published, and the remaining two are in the press.

COLONIAL EDITIONS FOR THE COLONIES ONLY.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—It would, I venture to think, be of some guidance to those who have any interest in exporting books to the Continent to ascertain, through the medium of your valuable paper, the views of publishers and authors in general as to where the line is to be drawn in supplying 'Colonial Editions' to the Continent. On the covers of the majority of the Colonial Editions is printed: 'This Edition is issued for circulation in India and the British Colonies only.' Whether this notice appears only as a mere matter of form is the question at issue.

Your correspondent has for some time been cognisant that some English publishers supply their 'Colonial Editions' to Continental houses. The question raised is equally of importance to the author and to the publisher, for if the Continental trade become aware of the fact that the Colonial Edition can thus be obtained the original English Edition will at once become a thing of the past so far as the Continental trade is concerned.

In these days of keen competition, no Continental firm would think of ordering a six-shilling novel when the same book can be had for 3*s.* 6*d.*, or even much cheaper if ordered in paper covers.

The matter in question is one that the Publishers' Association might well discuss, both in their own interest as well as that of the author.

Trusting you will allow me to ventilate this important question in your Journal, I am,

Your obedient servant,

One in Doubt.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—I have on several occasions lately received publishers' letters stamped 1*d.* surcharged 3*d.* on delivery.

It may be a general convenience to the trade if you will print the enclosed letter from our local P. M. General.

Yours faithfully,

J. A. Ogle,

Sir,—With reference to your communication, dated the 12th instant, complaining that two London letters each bearing a penny stamp were surcharged 3*d.* each, and inquiring whether there was not an 'all-sea penny postage from London to Australia,' I have the honour to intimate that there is no such rate of postage between England and here. The postage of 2½*d.* should have been prepaid on each of the letters in question, and, this not having been done, the surcharge of 3*d.* per letter was correct, the deficiency—1½*d.* on each—being doubled in accordance with the Regulations.

A TRIBUTE TO THE AUTHOR OF 'FO'C'SLE YARNS.'

There was more in Brown than the great laughter: there was also the great capacity for tears. No whining, puling, whimpering wail was his, but the honest outpouring of a strong hearty man. With the different aspects of sorrow his sympathy was no less fine, delicate, intuitive, and true, than with all that is mirthful. How did he, a man, come to surmise, to feel along with all else even the physical distress of a mother who has lost her child? That he did so stands recorded in a short poem, 'Mater Dolorosa,' written in dialect, as such things must be; the poor ignorant material-minded loving woman clutches at your throat; you choke, you sob, your tears are mingled with hers. Strange that he whose literary ambition was to have written just one story, 'the shortest possible, a mere page or two,' which should thus capture and annihilate his reader, was unaware that he had done the thing in verse!

The Manx dialect, so easily interpreted, is still a stumbling-block to many who might otherwise enjoy Brown's poems; and there is a tendency to relegate him to that limbo of the not quite literary men among whose ranks stands (if dialect fixes the line) the illustrious figure of Burns; and yet who would give 'Tam o' Shanter' for all that Burns wrote to please the Edinburgh drawing-rooms? The use and abuse of dialect is, however, too big a question to be dealt with here. There remains Brown's intense local patriotism; every inch of his native island was sacred to him; he knew it from end to end, every hill, every glen, Port Erin and its cliffs, the Curragh and its flowery winding paths, and black bogs lit up by that perfect flower, the bog-bean: the whole in his eyes was beautiful. And so it was with the people; nobody understood their weaknesses better, or exposed them more frankly, but for all this he loved them passionately, and they him. But this capacity of affection for a little corner of the earth and its inhabitants was after all only a symptom in Brown; had he been born elsewhere, had Jedburgh claimed him her son, or Exmoor, or some rich English county of the Midland region, gracious with trees, spreading its spacious meadows to a kindly wind, the result would have been the same: he would have known every path, every stile, every nook where flowers are to be found, every streamlet, every pool and the innermost lives of all the men and women within his reach; of all, not only of the poor and humble, but of the rich, possibly even of that most inaccessible, most intractable middle-class. There was no room in Brown for Thackeray's hatred of the snob, for Flaubert's physical dread of the bourgeois; in all he found something to love and admire, in all, too, something to laugh at and with.

Brown's love of Nature—the phrase is inevitable—was something different from all this; he was not so much an observer as an enthusiast, nay, a real passionate lover; there was something mystic in his attachment, and it was all the more attractive because of its reserves: he did not open readily this inmost shrine of his heart; there was a certain [illegible] about him, the chaste awe of the virgin lover.

He read a certain humanity into natural things, feeling for them as though actually living and sentient. The Jungfrau, when the sunset glow had gone, appalled him as being dead, and he rejoiced to note her recovery under the moonlight: mountain streams were always to him 'little scamps' playing mischievous merry pranks among the hills, and he was genuinely sorry for the untimely fate of a rill in Ireland, which, rising in a tarn on the top of a headland, only lived to tumble abruptly over a cliff into the sea: there was pathos to him in this short career.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. Charles Dudley Warner.

Many readers on this side of the Atlantic will read with deep regret the announcement of Mr. Charles Dudley Warner's sudden death. Mr. Warner was out walking at Hartford, Connecticut, when he entered a house, apparently in great pain, and asked for some water, which he drank. He then lay down for a while and suddenly expired.

Charles Dudley Warner was born in Plainfield of good Puritan stock. His earliest work consisted of contributions while at Hamilton College to Putnams' and other magazines. For some years he practised as a lawyer in Chicago, and later moved to Hartford, where he became editor and part proprietor of the Hartford Courant. He travelled widely in America and in Europe, and, like other well-known American authors, combined lecturing with writing—education, literature, and prison reform being his favourite subjects.

He was a voluminous writer, and several of his works have been popular. The best-known are: 'My Summer in a Garden,' 'Life of Washington Irving,' 'A Little Journey in the World,' 'The Relation of Literature to Life,' 'Their Pilgrimage,' 'Backlog Studies,' 'In the Wilderness,' and 'The Golden House.' He edited 'A Library of the World's Best Literature' and 'American Men of Letters.' His autobiographical 'Being a Boy' is capital reading. For a short time Mr. Warner conducted 'The Editor's Study' in Harper's Magazine, but though it was uniformly interesting under his charge, it lacked the distinction given to it by his predecessor, Mr. W. D. Howells. With his brother authors Mr. Warner was extremely popular.

Professor Shuttleworth.

The death, after a long illness, is recorded of the Rev. Professor Shuttleworth, of King's College. The eldest son of Canon Shuttleworth, a noted preacher of Cornwall, he was educated at Forest School, in Essex, and St. Mary's Hall, Oxford. In 1873 he was ordained by Dr. Mackarness to the curacy of St. Barnabas, Oxford, and ten years later the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's appointed him to the rectory of St. Nicholas Cole Abbey with St. Nicholas Olave, St. Mary Somerset, St. Mary Mountshaw, and St. Benet with St. Peter. Very shortly afterwards Mr. Shuttleworth was appointed Lecturer in Pastoral and Liturgical Theology at King's College, and in 1890 he became Professor; while in 1893 he was nominated Lecturer in Ecclesiastical History and Literature. He wrote 'English Church and the New Democracy' and 'Some Aspects of Disestablishment,' and was a writer in the Church Times, a contributor to periodical literature, and at one time a frequent speaker at Church Congresses.

INDEX-MAKING.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Sir,—In a recently published book appertaining to the life and work of a deceased artist well known to me, the index-maker under the heading of the artist's name has put the item 'never drunk.' It is true that the author inserted a most injudicious paragraph in the body of the book, which most certainly should have not been allowed to appear.

I will not give the name of the work, but will let you have privately full particulars.

Yours truly,
T. Batterbury.

SCHOOL JOKES.

The best collection of school jokes we have come across for a long time is given by Miss E. M. Griffiths in this month's issue of Longman's Magazine. Here are some amusing departures due to errors in spelling:—

'The blood in the body is taken by means of tubs to the heart and there detained.'

'All alkalies have a soupy feeling.'

'A volcano is a burning mountain that has a creator and throws out melted rooks.'

'Maidstone is the centre of the pop trade.'

'I came sore and conquered.'

'Unwhacked along Clitumness, Grazes the milk-white steer.'

'The night rat came rolling up ragged and brown.'

'His brain was teething with grand ideas in all directions.'

'If the earth did not revolt, we should always have equal nights and days.'

'Stored in some trouser-house of mighty kings.'

I have preserved the two following, says Miss Griffiths, for the utter confusion of anyone who shall dare to deny that words of deepest wisdom may fall from the lips, or pens, of babes:—

'The lungs are organs of execration.'

'The soul has two sides, a dark and a white, and it hides the white side.'

The next class of mistakes are those which are the result of unsuccessful guessing. The morality of conscious, deliberate guessing at examinations is perhaps doubtful, but I frequently find on inquiry, continues the chronicler, that the perpetrators of such suspicious-looking answers wrote down what they honestly believed to be facts. And even if they confessed to being uncertain of their ground, which of us has not been guilty of the same offence under similar harassing circumstances? At any rate, the practice provides such an amusing study of youthful ingenuity that we may easily forgive the offenders. Here are a few examples:—

Q. What do you understand by the following:—Pig iron, Bristol boards, lumber trade, shoddy, insulators, buffers, lamp-black?

A. 'Pig-iron is what they make the nose rings for pigs of.'

'Bristol boards are schools where very poor children go.'

'People who keep pawnbrokers' shops are said to be in the lumber trade.'

'Shoddy is a kind of drink much used in Ireland.'

Insulators are: 1. 'Islanders.' 2. 'Machines used to freeze cream and other liquids to make ice.' 3. 'People who insult other people.'

The following are perhaps less innocent or intelligent than they seem:—

'The base of a triangle is the side which we don't talk about.'

'A triangle is sometimes regarded as standing upon a select inside, which is then called its base.'

'The apex of the heart is placed downwards and slightly upwards.'

'The Subjunctive Mood is used in a doubtful manner.'

'Rapids are pieces of water which run with great force down the middle of rivers.'

'Excommunication means that no one is to speak to some one.'

'The North and South Poles mean that if a ship comes near one and looks for the farther one she can't see it.'

'The earth is round, like a plate, but some people think it is flat. The North Pole has not been sufficiently explored to judge of that part being round.'

'A diplomat is some one who puts true things in a better (!) light, which changes them and alters their sense.'

'Polynesia is a group of small islands in the Pacific which are under the protection of the British, otherwise seem very quiet and peace-loving.'

'Evaporation means going quickly and condensation means going slowly.'

'Fiction is something which is believed in but which is nothing.'

'Fiction,' so runs a 'school joke' under my hand, 'is the imaginary power; it may be founded on fact, but not necessarily the strict truth.'

The article is a long one, and these extracts, made at random, show its quality.

STEVENSON AS A TALKER.

All comment on the Stevenson Letters made by the near friends of the author centred, sooner or later, in the statement that they were, though incomparable as letters, no better than his talk; that they, indeed, represented just his talk. And when we are told that that talk was the delight of his intimates we can believe it without difficulty. It might, in fact, be said that, among the thinking, the sum of the effect produced by these letters, and their chief value, was to draw attention to how very good a thing good talk is, and also to bring about a realisation of how rare, in our English-speaking world, such talk is getting to be. If Mr. Stevenson had been a Frenchman, and if the public to which his letters were ultimately given had been French, the discovery, by that public, that he was wont so spontaneously to pour himself forth in his friendships, reserving himself so little, touching so fearlessly upon all the things of life that are near the quick, would probably have caused little surprise. But with the appreciation of the English-reading world a certain surprise has undoubtedly been mingled. We have had other letters of eminent writers given to us in recent years, but they contained no intimations of an ability or a willingness to communicate thought on all subjects, personal or universal, with anything approaching Mr. Stevenson's abundance.—From 'The Point of View,' in the October Scribner's.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons.—'The City of Chartres, its Cathedral and Churches,' by H. J. L. J. Massé, M.A. ('Bell's Handbooks to Continental Churches.') The history of Chartres, dating back to the time when the town was besieged by the Romans under Julius Cæsar and formed a stronghold of the ancient body of Druids, possesses many features of extreme interest, and these are naturally reflected in its notable cathedral and other ecclesiastical buildings. Considering the limited space at his disposal, Mr. Massé has contrived to give an excellent account of the cathedral and churches of Chartres, and in this he has been happily aided by a large number of illustrations, some being taken from larger works on the subject, others being original. The volume supplies a valuable description in brief of all the more important features in church history and architecture at Chartres, and is not only admirable in itself but furnishes a capital stepping stone to a more extensive exploration of the subject.

From the same.—'Eton,' by A. Clutton-Brock, B.A. ('Handbooks to the Great Public Schools.') All people are more or less interested in Eton, and this is a work that will quickly absorb the attention of the reader, the account of the history of the college, its school life, routine of study, methods of recreation, &c., being very pleasantly narrated. Illustrations of course form no slight attraction of such a book, and these in the present instance are exceedingly good. The history of Eton would itself supply material for a large volume, and we can therefore quite understand that the author has found it no easy matter to compress this part of his subject within reasonable limits; but we can, generally, compliment him on the success that has attended his efforts. The main object of the work, in conformity with the series of which it forms a part, is to give an account of the present condition of the school, and perhaps we shall not greatly err in saying that this is likely to prove the most popular portion of the volume, and that the chapters on school work and athletics are tolerably certain to be eagerly consulted before the purely historical portion of the book. In relation to the last named of these topics, Mr. Clutton-Brock gives an interesting account of the 'Wall Game' at football. Of all the writers in this admirable series he may be said to have been most fortunate in his subject, but he may also at the same time be congratulated on having treated it in a very capable manner.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'Studies in Fossil Botany,' by Dukinfield Henry Scott, M.A., F.R.S. This volume takes its origin from a special course of lectures delivered under the same title at University College, London, in 1896, but with the exception of the introductory lecture, which retains something of its original character, all have been completely recast and in the majority of instances wholly rewritten. The object of the author has not been to write a manual of fossil botany, a subject upon which there are many excellent works already, but 'to present to the botanical reader those results of palæontological inquiry which appear to be of fundamental importance from the botanist's point of view.' The subjects of the various lectures are the Equisetales, Sphenophyllales, Lycopodiales, Ferns, Cycadofilices, and Mesozoic Gymnosperms. The volume, which is profusely illustrated, forms an admirable treatise on these branches of botany, and should be of great interest and assistance to all who are engaged in a study of the subject. Care has evidently been taken to bring the information thoroughly up to date, and the value of the illustrations, many of which are original, is especially to be commented upon.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—'Tommy and Grizel,' by J. M. Barrie. Those who were interested in the early years of Thomas Sandys as chronicled by the author in 'Sentimental Tommy' will probably find pleasure in the further account of his doings, but those who have not read the earlier book will, we fear, be disappointed by the present one. Of plot such as is likely to hold the attention of the reader there is little, and all the interest is centred in the eccentricities of Tommy's character and the humours of Grizel, Elspeth, Alice, Mrs. Jerry, David Gemmell, and Aaron Latta. Some of these provoke genuine amusement, but from constant repetition become unsatisfying and wearisome. There are also several good scenes, but good scenes in themselves do not make a good novel. Truth to tell, Mr. Barrie's latest work is a little depressing. It never reaches the high [illegible] will forgive us for saying we are glad Tommy is dead. His [illegible] amusing enough in their way, but as subject for extended mental dissection they are wanting in substance. It may be that we have taken 'Tommy and Grizel' too seriously, and in bulk rather than portions. The book is one that loses much of its attraction by being perused at one sitting. Essentially a story of character portrayal rather than incident, it is best enjoyed leisurely and at intervals. But we are quite convinced that it neither does justice to Mr. Barrie's reputation as a novelist, nor touches the standard of which he is capable. The death of Tommy is one of the most absurd things in recent fiction. and seems to suggest that Mr. Barrie was at a loss how to dispose of his character.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'Acetylene: a Handbook for the Student and Manufacturer,' by Vivian B. Lewes, F.I.C. The time is certainly exceedingly appropriate for the publication of a work of this kind, for within the last few years the importance of acetylene as a factor in the production of artificial light has become greatly magnified. The object of the book, as stated by the author, is to 'gather together not only the information gleaned in recent years, but also the immense mass of facts discovered with regard to acetylene in the sixty-four years which have elapsed since its discovery by Edmund Day in 1836.' The volume is divided into some eleven chapters, respectively treating of the history of acetylene, its preparation, properties, chemical reactions; the electrical furnace and its application to the manufacture of calcium carbide; the properties and impurities of the last named constituent; the generation of acetylene; the impurities of commercial acetylene and the processes adopted for their removal; the generation of light and power from acetylene; the utilisation of diluted acetylene; and the analysis of material for carbide manufacture and of carbide and acetylene. It will thus be seen that every branch of the subject is covered, and we can speak of the work as being excellently arranged, clearly written, and thoroughly practical. It should be of great help to those who are professionally connected with the industry of lighting.

From the same.—'The Puppet Show,' by Marian Bower. It may at once be said of this novel that the characters are such as will readily interest the reader, and that the hero in particular presents a personality that is certain to ensure warm sympathy. At the outset of his career he is confronted by a revelation that not only invalidates the accomplishment of his long-cherished plans, but destroys all his hopes for the future. In other words, he learns from the family lawyer on coming of age that he is the son of a madwoman, and that the deeply scarred wound in his throat, which he has in vain endeavoured to get his father to explain, was inflicted during an attack she made upon him when only a child. John Thisselton, however, braces himself up to the situation in a way that will, as we have said, gain him the admiration of all readers. What eventually becomes of his life, into what devious roads it leads him, and what experiences he has, we are not disposed to spoil sport by telling. It will be enough to state that they are thoroughly interesting. There are other actors in the story who will irresistibly claim attention—Fred Heriot, the doctor, for instance; and in each case the delineation is struck off in a few quiet suggestive touches rather than in a long laborious analysis. Lovers of fiction [illegible] 'The Puppet Show' [illegible] worthy of [illegible] attention.

Mr. William Heinemann: 'The Lane that had no Turning,' by Gilbert Parker. What Thrums is to Mr. Barrie, 'Pontiac' is to Mr. Parker, and in this volume of 'associated tales' he again takes us to the imaginary town in Lower Canada. The attraction of his work, arising quite as much from the subtle description of French Canadian life as from actual incident, is strong as ever, and there are few readers, we believe, who will not be charmed by this latest exhibition of his ability. 'The Lane that had no Turning' is the title given to the first of the twenty-six stories composing the volume; it is also the longest and most important. The picture of the poor French hunchback, Louis Racine, who has succeeded to the seigneury of Pontiac, and in the warmth of his national longings is suspected of a treasonable attitude towards the English Government, is limned with delicate art, and the character of his beautiful wife, tenderly devoted to him despite the physical affliction inherited from his ancestors, is equally affecting. All the stories are good, however, and Mr. Parker by his refined treatment and excellent descriptive powers has rendered them exceedingly interesting.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Realisation of Justus Moran,' by Frederic Carrel. The characters of this story almost give offence at the outset by the modernity of their conversation—that clever talk which has such an affectation of superior knowledge, and which really denotes profound conceit. But the after chapters show that their proceedings are decidedly interesting, and the story as a whole may be judged distinctly original, if in some places somewhat rudimentary.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Prejudged, by Florence Montgomery. It is perhaps natural for the young to take a dislike for the elderly and maimed; in their own fresh vigour, they have little tolerance for anything that distorts the view. Upon such a dislike the plot of this story is founded. Blanche Talbot, travelling with her friend and chaperon, Lady Mary Fitzroy, meets at the hotel of a Continental watering place an apparently objectionable gentleman of a talkable disposition but a slightly deformed figure, who still further adds to his ill-attributes by wearing blue goggles. She hastily conceives a prejudice against him, which is only worn away after a considerable time, when, woman like, she finds herself in love with him. The story is simple in its characteristics, and the plot may easily be foretold by the experienced novel-reader from the first chapter; but it has many points of interest, and will be found thoroughly readable, if a little old-fashioned.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'Samuel Richardson: a Critical and Biographical Study,' by Clara Linklater Thomson. This is an attempt to gather the essential facts of Richardson's life within the compass of a moderate volume. The chief authority on which the author relies is Mrs. Barbauld's memoir, 'largely supplemented by information obtained from Richardson's unpublished correspondence in the Forster Library at the South Kensington Museum, from the registers of Charterhouse Chapel and St. Bride's, Fleet Street, and from other contemporary sources.' Not the least interesting portions of the work are the critical chapters, especially those on the 'Development of the Novel,' 'The Art of Richardson,' and 'Richardson's Influence.' In these sections the authoress enters into the subject with a detail that testifies very eloquently to the close study she has made of the novelist's works. Her opinions may to a large extent have been influenced by the writings of Brunetière, Le Breton, and Texte, and Dr. Erich Schmidt, but she frequently shows that she is quite capable of forming an independent judgment for herself. 'Richardson was popular,' she writes, 'because he gave voice to sentiments that were already latent in society; it was because he anticipated the younger generation by giving expression to those feelings that he was so much idolised by it. Almost all the characteristics of the romantic school—its disregard of conventional literary form, its exaltation of emotion, its idealisation of women, its preoccupation with the theme of education, its recognition of the moral value of the individual, are found in Richardson's novels.' The general student of English literature will find this volume very interesting, and it may especially be commended to those whose knowledge of Richardson and his work is but slight.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Quisante,' by Anthony Hope. As an intellectual effort we doubt whether Mr. Hope has ever done anything better than this. To the character of 'Quisante' in its minutest detail he has evidently devoted the closest study. The man is depicted with a dexterity and finish of execution that earns our sincere admiration. Quisante is a being of varied attributes, who has the power of arousing great admiration in his associates or the reverse. Perhaps his shrewd old aunt, Maria, knows him best. She has no love for him, but he forms an interest in her life, and she watches him with the close attention that one would bestow on a favourite in the political world. Lady May Galton, a young girl of high social standing, unfortunately for her own peace of mind, is equally attracted. In time she comes to think that it is almost her duty to marry him, and by her influence contribute to the success of his career. She is ambitious; it is grateful to her this thought of being of some use in the world. She quite recognises Quisante's bad points, his want of refinement, affectations and duplicity, but she believes that she can mould him to better purpose. His 'moments' of intellectual display, when he holds his audiences, also have great weight with her. So she throws over the lover of her own class, and disgusts her friends by marrying the man who is regarded as a political schemer and adventurer—'clever no doubt, but a rank outsider.' The result is not altogether fortunate, but in this respect the reader may be left to pursue his researches unaided. If any objection can be brought against Mr. Hope's novel, it is that it is too coldly intellectual for the ordinary reader of fiction: that it is wanting in warmth of feeling. The analytical method of Henry James is followed, rather than the impulsive style of Marie Corelli. But that the story is exceedingly interesting there can be no question. All the characters are evidently closely studied portraitures, and their views of each other, and the actions that such views cause them to take, are described with a skill that only the thorough master of fiction can attain.

From Mr. John Murray. — 'The Origin of Species,' by Charles Darwin. New impression. It is forty-one years since Darwin's epoch-making work appeared, and during all that time it has probably been the most widely discussed book of its kind in existence. Between 1859 and 1872 six editions were sold, and the price has hitherto been comparatively high. At length Mr. Murray re-issues the work at half-a-crown, in a form that will appeal to all. The print is remarkably clear, the paper good, and the binding at once attractive and substantial. It should be added that the volume is furnished with a glossary and an index. In this new form the work is likely to have a fresh run of popularity.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'The Conscience of Coralie,' by F. Frankfort Moore. The two principal characters in this story are an American girl and a Socialist. Between them most of the interlacing interest passes, the surroundings being of an aristocratic nature. The American girl is young and enthusiastic, with that splendid aptitude for inquiring into causes which distinguishes her race; the Socialist is bold and resolute, and appeals to her sympathy by the loftiness of his opinions. Here at last is a man with depth of feeling, who is not afraid to speak out his mind; the majority of the people about her seem to live only for pleasure. Truth to tell, Coralie Randall, though fond of inquiring for reasons, is a little impulsive in her judgments, and this she finds out before the story is ended. Because a man is apparently selfish and cynical, it does not necessarily follow that he is so; and society veneer has more than once hidden a multitude of good qualities. However, Coralie's admiration for the Socialist's views, rather than actual liking for himself, causes her to engage herself to him, and she then finds that nearer association does not make the situation any the more tolerable, and in the end she comes to have a better appreciation of her society connections. Mr. Frankfort Moore has handled an engaging subject with experienced skill, and the characters of his story will appeal to the reader as being exceedingly lifelike and interesting.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Three Little Maids,' by Ethel Turner (Mrs. H. R. Curlewis). This is a capital story, told with vivacity, point, and humour, and admirably calculated to interest young people. The illustrations are a further attraction of the book. One of the chief characters develops into an authoress, and we leave her in the happy day-dream of future prosperity. Other youthful aspirants for literary distinction may be glad to know that she receives a sum of fifteen pounds for her work and a royalty. But the joy of publication is within her heart, and with this she is perfectly content.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co. — 'In White Raiment,' by William Le Queux. We are afraid the author has rather over-reached himself this time. Sensational fiction is all very well, but it must, even in the hurry and bustle of its events, be convincing. After-reflection may show its absurdity, but only when the conclusion has been reached. Mr. Le Queux exhibits all his old-time vigour and readiness of narration, but in the invention of his material he exceeds the widest limits of probability. A young doctor goes to stay with a fellow practitioner at Hammersmith. During the absence of his friend on a home visit he acts as his locum tenens. One morning he is called out to see, as he supposes, a dying girl. Arrived at the house, one in a good neighbourhood, he is interviewed by the father of his proposed patient, who, after some preliminary conversation, makes a strange proposal. It is that the doctor shall marry his daughter—certain to be dead before morning—and by so doing earn £10,000. Ultimately the sum is increased to £20,000, and the doctor, a poor though clever man, is dazzled by the bribe and consents. The ceremony at once takes place, the bride being heavily veiled and supported (as one would think she had every need to be) in the church by her relatives. When the bridal party return to the house, the doctor naturally looks for the payment of the £20,000, but he is informed that another condition must be fulfilled before the amount can become his—the bride must die before the next morning; in other words, he is expected to make away with her. This he indignantly refuses to do, and the excitement now becomes fast and furious. But the fearful improbability of the events completely overbalances their interest, and the reader is more likely to be provoked to impatience than absorbing attention. Mr. Le Queux has failed to exercise his usual artistic judgment in this story. It is a matter, we are afraid, of over-production.

New Editions. — Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have sent out a sixth edition, revised to date, of that serviceable and interesting little work, 'How and Where to Fish in Ireland: a Hand-Guide for Anglers,' by 'Hi-Regan.' The value of this little work as a guide to the enthusiastic lover of sport has been fully tested during the numerous editions it has run through, and the publication of another now shows how highly it is thought of. Brothers of the rod who are purposing a visit to the 'distressful' country could scarcely do better than provide themselves with a copy of this excellent mentor.—Mr. Thomas Murby has issued in his 'Science and Art Department' series of text-books a twelfth edition, revised and corrected, of 'Mineralogy,' by Frank Rutland, F.G.S., and a tenth edition of 'Skertchley's Geology,' revised in accordance with the latest requirements of the South Kensington Syllabus, by James Monckman, D.Sc. Both these works in their respective subjects are of excellent service, which is proved by the demand for them.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

NOW IN PREPARATION

'Publishers' Circular' Christmas Number

The chief object of this Number is to give a complete summary of the Presentation Books of the Year, and thus afford a useful guide to purchasers in the choice of suitable volumes. It forms a most valuable aid to the Bookseller, and enables him, by circulating a few copies (with his own imprint) among his customers, to solicit very effectively their Christmas orders. As an Advertisement medium, therefore, it stands unrivalled.

This year our Christmas Number will be made even more attractive and representative than ever, and as it is very necessary, in order to advance the best interests of the Publishing Trade, that it should be issued in good time for Christmas purchasers, we would ask advertisers to send us their orders, with copy, as soon as possible, and in this way to help us in securing early publication. Books for review should be addressed to the Editor, and the parcel marked 'Christmas Number.'

November 2, 1900.

Of the many books dealing with the South African trouble, none possesses greater interest than 'The Great Boer War,' by Mr. A. Conan Doyle, which has just been published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. Much of this attraction no doubt arises from the style in which the work is written, previous volumes on the subject having mostly consisted of reproductions of the war correspondents' letters in the different newspapers, and these, though red-hot from the anvil, so to speak, and often thrilling in their intensity, have not been remarkable for well-balanced judgment or calm reflection. Moreover, they have only treated separate events of the campaign of which the writer was an actual eye-witness. Mr. Doyle is practically the first to supply a detailed history of the war in its many operations, and he has done this in so interesting and enlightening a fashion that readers, we feel sure, will be grateful for having the events of history so clearly and yet concisely placed before them. One feature of the volume is that it favours no political faction or party, nor has Mr. Doyle intentionally set himself the task of vindicating the actions of any particular general or War Office official. He narrates the facts as he has found them, without fear or favour, and though further disclosures may give cause for a modification or withdrawal of some of the opinions expressed, there can be no doubt that on our present knowledge Mr. Doyle's judgments and criticisms are amply justified.

The history opens with an able and lucid account of the Boer position founded on their actions from the first days of the Dutch Settlement in South Africa up to the time of the signing of the Convention in 1884. Their hardy, virile, unconquerable nature is especially pointed out. Mr. Doyle then proceeds to a consideration of the cause of quarrel, and he enumerates the more serious of the Uitlanders' grievances. At the same time the Boer side of the question is by no means lost sight of, and the argument that the country was theirs and did not belong to the crowd of new-comers in search of gold who clamoured for a share in its government is discussed at length. And so, after chapters respectively devoted to the negotiations and the eve of battle, we come to the actual outbreak of hostilities. The remainder of the book is devoted to a description of the different strategic movements—the battles of Talana Hill, Elandslaagte, and Rietfontein, Lombard's Kop and Nicholson's Nek, Lord Methuen's advance, the struggle at Magersfontein, Stormberg, Colenso, Ladysmith, Spion Kop, Vaalkranz, Buller's final advance, the siege and relief of Kimberley, the effect of Roberts's march to Bloemfontein, the siege of Mafeking, and so forth. All is related in a graphic and scholarly manner that adds dignity to the description. Finally, we have a chapter on the military lessons to be learnt from the war—certainly not the least important part of the work.

Perhaps in one respect it would be as well to obviate a possible misapprehension. Readers may naturally suppose that a good deal is said in the course of the history about the medical arrangements during the war. So much attention has been directed of late to the state of the hospitals in South Africa, with the preparations made generally for the treatment of the sick and wounded, that the opinion of a professional man like Mr. Doyle will be eagerly sought after. Very wisely, as we think—since it hardly comes into the main scope of his book—Mr. Doyle has almost entirely avoided the subject, merely alluding to it in a few lines of the concluding chapter. From these we make the following extract: 'Where the Department seemed to be open to criticism was in not having more men upon the spot. Capetown was swarming with civil surgeons, and there was no difficulty in conveying them to Bloemfontein, Kroonstad, or wherever else they were needed. But the situation was a most difficult one, and the men upon the spot, from General Wilson to the humblest orderly, were worked to their extreme capacity. It is easy now to criticise what they did not do, but it is just also to remember what they did. The fact is that the true blame in the matter rests not with the Medical Department but with the composition of the South African army. The Medical Department is arranged to meet the wants of such a body of regular troops as Great Britain could put in the field, but not to provide for a large army of irregulars and colonials very much larger than could ever have been foreseen.' It would be interesting to know from trustworthy sources how the Boers fared in this matter of medical treatment. We should add that the volume is supplied with several maps and an official table of casualties; and that in the matter of general production it does credit to the publishers.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

In the course of a few weeks Mr. John Lane will publish Mr. Stephen Phillips's new tragedy 'Herod,' which is now attracting so much interest among playgoers.

Capt. Mahan's new work, 'The Problem of Asia and its Effect upon International Policies,' will be published on the 17th inst. by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

Mrs. F. A. Steel's new novel, 'The Hosts of the Lord,' will be published by Mr. William Heinemann on the 8th. As is the case with most of Mrs. Steel's stories, the scene is laid in India.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are publishing immediately Dr. Weir Mitchell's new story, 'Dr. North and his Friends.'

Messrs. Longmans & Co. are bringing out a new edition of Froude's 'Lectures on South Africa,' originally delivered before the Philosophical Institution, Edinburgh, twenty years ago. Miss Froude contributes an introduction. The same firm has nearly ready Dr. Gross's work on 'The Sources and Literature of English History from the Earliest Times to about 1485.'

With its November issue, the Century Magazine begins a year of romance, during which several noted writers of fiction will contribute to the magazine short stories, novels, or novelettes, including Mr. Rudyard Kipling, Mrs. Burnett, Mr. Bret Harte, Mr. Lew Wallace, Dr. Weir Mitchell, Miss Wilkins, Mr. Howells, Mr. James, Mr. Cable, and Mr. Stockton.

Owing to the favourable reception accorded by the public to those letters of the late Prince Bismarck to his wife which have already appeared in print, although in some instances only incomplete, Prince Herbert von Bismarck has decided to publish a complete collection so far as he could bring them together when arranging his family papers. In so doing he has been guided by the conviction that the founder of the German Empire will be drawn humanly nearer to the hearts of many of his countrymen by the publication of these letters, which afford a fresh proof that his soul was as great and profound as his genius. So full are they of warm feeling and racy descriptions that they speak for themselves. The series opens with the letter soliciting from Herr von Puttkammer the hand of his daughter, written in 1847, which is followed by the many letters to Princess Bismarck ending in 1892. The correspondence which forms a volume of about 600 pages, with a likeness of the Princess in colours, and ten other portraits, is to be published by the J. G. Cotta'sche Buchhandlung, Stuttgart, in the middle of November.

Dr. Robert Hutchison, Assistant Physician to the London Hospital, is publishing, with Mr. Edward Arnold, a work on 'Food and the Principles of Dietetics.' The book deals with the whole subject comprehensively, and includes discussion of the amount of food required in health, animal foods, vegetable foods, sugar, water, mineral waters, tea, coffee, cocoa, alcoholic beverages, the cooking of food, digestion, principles of feeding in infancy, childhood, and disease, &c. The volume contains between 500 and 600 pages, and is illustrated by three plates in colour and graphic diagrams from sketches by the author. A special edition for the United States will be issued simultaneously by Messrs. William Wood & Co., of New York.

The next volume of Methuen's Standard Library, which will be shortly ready, is Gibbon's 'Memoirs of my Life and Writings,' edited by Dr. Birkbeck Hill. The editor has made copious use of Gibbon's own writings to throw light on his character, drawing largely not only on the five volumes of his miscellaneous works, but also on the 'Decline and Fall,' where beneath the historian can constantly be traced the man. He has, moreover, illustrated many points in literature and history of the eighteenth century, which, however clear they may have been to the readers of Gibbon's age, are now obscure.

'Sparks from Camp Fires' is the suggestive title of a work by Captain Creagh, which Messrs. Chapman & Hall are publishing.

In a few days the Board of Education will issue the Report on Technical and Commercial Education in East Prussia, Poland, Galicia, Silesia, Bohemia, and Saxony that is the result of the inspection and inquiries made by Mr. James Baker, F.R.G.S., during last year. The report is a volume in Blue Book form of about 130 pages, and deals fully with the matter, especially in the 16 or 18 chief industrial centres of these countries, and embodies interesting details of the work and tabulated information on building, equipment, how the schools are established and maintained, &c. It differs from most other reports that have been issued by not merely describing well-known centres and cities of interest, but small towns where excellent schools are working. An introductory letter by Mr. M. E. Sadler will preface the work.

Mr. Fisher Unwin publishes this week a book under the title of 'First Aid to the Injured,' with special reference to accidents occurring in the mountains. The book has been prepared by Dr. Oscar Bernhard, of Samaden, a physician well known to visitors in the Engadine, and translated into English by Dr. Michael Foster. The volume originated in a series of lectures given to the Engadine guides, and has been published already in French, German, and Italian. The book is illustrated with diagrams.

Some time ago Mr. George Allen announced that he had in hand a collected edition of Ruskin's works, with a considerable amount of new matter. We now learn that a start has been made, and that the first volume may be expected early next year.

A new boys' paper, Boys of the Empire, published by Mr. Andrew Melrose at the modest sum of one penny, has made its appearance. If the good qualities observable in the first number are maintained in subsequent issues there should be little doubt, we think, of its success. The paper was registered, we understand from the editor, Mr. Howard Spicer, in April of this year, and was widely advertised; but a month ago a rival production bearing the same title, but published at a halfpenny, was rushed out by another firm. The law of copyright is certainly strange.

The 1899-1900 edition of 'Low's Handbook to the Charities of London' will be published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. next week. Several additions have been made to the work, and it has been revised and brought up to date. Particulars of nearly twelve hundred institutions, dispensing every conceivable form of charitable relief, are given in its pages.

A new volume of poems by Sir Lewis Morris is to be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. this month. In addition to a number of lyrics, it contains two long poems. One is a study in elegiac verse. The other is entitled 'A Georgian Romance,' and relates in blank verse a tragic and rather blood-curdling story from the report of the Russian criminal tribunals of last spring.

On Monday next Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish Mr. Louis Becke's new novel, 'Edward Barry, South Sea Pearler,' to which allusion was made in these columns several weeks ago. He has also a work of fiction by Mrs. Amelia Barr nearly ready. It is entitled 'Trinity Bells,' and is a story of early New York.

The Clarendon Press has a new edition of the Rev. W. Garrett Horder's 'Treasury of American Sacred Song' in preparation. To this has been added several further hymns, and the anthology has in other respects been revised.

Dr. A. Russel Wallace has collected into two volumes, now published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., the most important of his contributions to periodical literature ranging over the last thirty-five years. The volumes have for a general title 'Studies, Scientific and Social,' and the first comprises the more strictly scientific topics, such as problems of geology, of zoology, of plant and animal distribution. Five papers deal with the evolutionist theory; two others treat the cognate subjects of instinct and of human selection. The second volume contains Dr. Wallace's views on educational, political, and ethical subjects, including a number of papers directly or indirectly concerned with the project of land nationalisation.

'Little Guide to Sussex' is the title of a volume which Mr. Brabant has written and Mr. E. H. New has illustrated. The subjects which are treated of most fully are history, architecture, and scenery of the county. Though the size of the work is small, yet the author believes that all the important points have been treated at adequate length. In particular the account of the churches is believed to be more minute and comprehensive than in any previous guide-books. Messrs. Methuen publish the book in their series of 'Little Guides.'

We are glad to observe that in his literary notes in the Express Mr. G. B. Burgin has dropped the farce of posing as a bookseller, and now initials his column. This is as it should be. But how does Mr. Burgin know that 'the most prominent book next spring will be "The Life of Richard Cobden," by the Right Hon. John Morley'? It is such statements that make literary gossip ridiculous and worthless.

Among the boys' books specially issued by Messrs. Blackie & Co. for the Christmas season will be a volume by Professor Macmillan, of the Elphinstone College, Bombay. It will contain typical stories of Rajput, Moghul, and Mahratta chivalry collected from Indian records.

The new number of Macmillan's Magazine, which begins the eighty-third volume, contains the first chapters of a new novel entitled 'The Sinner and the Problem,' by Mr. Eric Parker. The two little heroes are schoolboys, on whom the narrator of their youthful adventures a landscape-painter staying for his health's sake at the schoo!—

bestows these fanciful titles. In the same number fiction is also represented by two short stories—'A Lovely Sentiment,' which introduces a smart young Italian princess, and 'Private Whitworth, B.A.,' a tale of the South African War, by Mr. A. G. Hyde. The war has also inspired two other articles. In 'Our Army and its Critics,' the Hon. J. Fortescue rebukes amateur reformers. An anonymous reviewer writes enthusiastically in praise of Dr. Farrelly's book on 'The Settlement after the War in South Africa,' recently published. 'Art and the Woman,' by Two Brothers, deals with the reasons of woman's failure to effect any first-rate achievement in Art and Letters, and Mr. Etty continues his well-written 'Studies in Shakespeare's History' with Richard the Third.

The Rev. J. Howard Masterman has written, and Messrs. Macmillan & Co. publish, 'Notes to the Greek Text of the First Epistle of St. Peter,' designed for the use of students for Deacon's Orders, as an introduction to larger and fuller commentaries. The Introduction discusses the author of the Epistle, its destination, date, and circumstances, its relation to other books and passages in the Bible. This is followed by a paraphrase in the colloquial English of to-day, intended to bring out more clearly the meaning of the Epistle by detaching it from phrases whose edge is blunted by long familiarity. The text given is that of Westcott and Hort, but it is broken up; the comment follows continuously upon each sentence or fraction of a sentence. Thus the Epistle is currently expounded, phrase by phrase.

Messrs. Rivington will have ready immediately 'Happy Suffering' ('La Bonne Souffrance'), by François Coppée, translated by Catherine M. Welby, with a preface by W. H. Hutton, B.D.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus will shortly publish a new edition of Robert Surtees's 'Handley Cross, or Mr. Jorrocks's Hunt,' with the original illustrations by John Leech. They have also in hand a large-type, fine-paper edition of Charles Reade's most notable work 'The Cloister and the Hearth.'

In 'Social Justice: a Critical Essay,' which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. publish in this country, Mr. W. W. Willoughby attempts to apply the principles of transcendental ethics to the concrete problems of social life. The author's object is firstly negative; to demonstrate that there exist no absolute rules of justice in the abstract, and consequently that the revolutionary and socialistic theories which presuppose such abstract rights have no ethical support; secondly, positive, to show that, considering ethics as an art, a certain amount of instruction can be given for the application in practice of ethical principles—that certain rules of right may be stated which will probably on the whole produce the greatest aggregate of justice. In the process he finds occasion to analyse the conceptions of equality and of property; to discuss the theory that labour constitutes a title.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

Among the many congresses held in Paris this year the most important in the domain of education was the Congress of Academicians which has created the International Union of Scientific Academies, projected long ago by Leibnitz and advocated by Mommsen nine years since, but thwarted at that time by international differences. According to the Hochschul-Nachrichten, of Munich, the learned men of France and Germany only agreed to unite their efforts in the cause of science at the moment when French regiments in distant China submitted to the command of a German general in the service of humanity and international law. 'Blood and iron still form the cement of cultured peoples even on the threshold of the twentieth century.' It was the Austrian Minister of Education who most contributed to this result by taking the initiative in supporting Mommsen's plan, and, after long resistance, the academies of Berlin and London followed the example set by Vienna, Leipzig, and Göttingen. Eighteen academical bodies now form the Union. These are the Academies of Amsterdam, Berlin, Brussels, Budapest, Christiania, Copenhagen, Göttingen, Leipzig, London, Munich, St. Petersburg, Rome, Stockholm, Vienna, Washington, and the three Paris Academies of Inscriptions and Belles-lettres, of Sciences, and of Moral and Political Sciences. The first general meeting of the Association was fixed for the middle of April 1901, in Paris, and the following subjects were selected for investigation and work: the measuring of degrees in Africa, encyclopædia of Islam, plans for the lending of MSS. and of other literary aids, the publication of Byzantine records, the solution of problems in natural and other sciences.

M. Y. Blaze de Bury has made a study of some popular English novelists, including Margaret Woods, Sarah Grand, George Moore, Thomas Hardy, George Meredith, W. H. Mallock, Rhoda Broughton, Rudyard Kipling, Grant Allen, and G. Du Maurier, in a series of essays called 'Les Romanciers anglais contemporains' (Paris, Perrin & Co.). The author puts the question, What types of the modern novel will live? This is his answer: 'Jude, Esther Waters, Oaks the Shepherd, are English of all ages who will always interest us. In George Moore's "Bachelors" there are some sketches which will accurately paint the oddities and peculiar habits of thought of our ancestors. That which is living and dramatic in the "Village Tragedy" will survive the æsthetics and Rossettisms (sic) of this clever but affected book. But, generally speaking, except the above works, we may predict without fear of being mistaken that these romances, devoid of romance or study of the soul, are not destined to survive the time in which they saw the light.'

An important contribution to the history of Prussia and of Europe is announced by E. S. Mittler & Sohn, Berlin, with the title, 'Aus der Zeit der Noth 1806–1815,' herausgegeben von Albert Pick. The work comprises a series of picturesque episodes in Prussian history taken from the letters and documents left by the famous Field-Marshal Neidhardt von Gneisenau. The publication has been made with the sanction of the patriotic soldier's great-grandson. Among the celebrities represented by their letters are: Ernst Moritz Arndt, Schleiermacher, Jahn, and Theodor Körner. Two portraits of Gneisenau are given in the volume.

An important work on the Russo-Turkish war of 1877–8 is announced by Librairie Militaire de R. Chapelot & Cie., entitled 'Les Occasions Perdues,' a strategical and critical study on the Turko-Russian campaign of 1877–8, by General Izzet-Fuad Pascha, Turkish minister at Madrid. The same firm publishes a work which will interest students of the Crimean war. This is an account of Marshal Pélissier's aide-de-camp, 'Le Colonel Cassaigne d'après sa Correspondance et celle de ses Amis, Afrique-Crimée,' par le Capitaine Cassaigne.

Count Leo Tolstoi, who was recently said to be again seriously ill, is once more able to get about, and takes such long walks and bicycle spins as might well appal many a younger man. When he stays within doors he writes all day long. He recently finished a work entitled 'Modern Slavery;' and then set to work, without a break, at the composition of a novel to be called 'Father Sergius,' a study of monastic life in Russia. It is the story of a man of the world disgusted with society life, who fondly imagines he may find in a monastery peace and oblivion of his past life. But the passions he believed himself capable of renouncing assail him with renewed force in his retreat, and his religious vocation does not afford him sufficient aid to overcome them. This is, perhaps, Tolstoi's answer to the Holy Synod's sentence of excommunication for criticisms of religious formalism contained in his recent writings, and notably in his 'Resurrection.'

A strange case of bibliomania is reported by Le Temps of October 5 as having occurred on the previous day in a Paris bookshop, a book-lover having been detected by an assistant making his exit with a three-franc book for which he had not paid. When reminded of the omission he exclaimed: 'Oh, yes; I forgot to pay,' at the same time pulling out his purse; but so strange was his manner that the assistant requested him to pay a visit to the Police Commissary of the quarter, to whom he at once confessed he had intended appropriating the volume. The Commissary was surprised at this frank avowal from one whose appearance and profession (not stated in the newspaper report) did not betoken want of means. The delinquent explained that he was possessed by an irresistible craving for books of all kinds, which he neither read nor sold, but simply hoarded. On the Commissary suggesting that it were more reasonable to buy them, M. X. (the name of the person in question is not given) objected: 'That is not the same thing. I never think of books when I don't see a bookshop. But no sooner do I see a quantity of books than I am possessed by an uncontrollable desire to take them. At first I tried to combat this feeling, but have been overcome, and now let things take their course.'

Wishing to ascertain the truth of this skilful defence, the Commissary next day paid a domiciliary visit to the book-lover, and found in the rooms occupied by his wife, his son, and himself an inconceivable quantity of books of all sizes and prices, from éditions de luxe at thirty francs to volumes at thirty-five centimes. Such a collection must have required two or three years to amass. This strange story concludes with the curious statement that 'the Commissary, satisfied of not having before him a responsible thief, has left M. X. provisionally at liberty.' It is to be hoped that the booksellers whose shops have stimulated M. X.'s acquisitive propensities may soon 'enjoy their own again.'

TRADE CHANGE.

Messrs. Parker & Co. have removed from Southampton Street, Strand, to more convenient premises at 31 Bedford Street, Strand.

'TIS SIXTY YEARS SINCE.

Under the title of 'In the Early Forties' Mr. George M. Smith, head of the firm of Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., contributes to the current number of the Cornhill an interesting account of his first enterprises in publishing. Sixty years ago, as Mr. Smith reminds us, the business of Smith, Elder and Co. was carried on at 65 Cornhill. It consisted chiefly of an export trade to India and the Colonies, but there was also 'a small publishing business occasionally involving a certain amount of enterprise.' 'As to my early attempts as a publisher,' says Mr. Smith, 'they began when I was about nineteen years of age. I had then no responsible position in the firm, but the business instinct was slowly awaking in me. I was shrewd enough to see that no steady policy was pursued in the publishing department. If a book made a success, then for a time almost everything that offered itself was accepted; this naturally produced a harvest of disasters; then for a while nothing at all was published. Various efforts were made to improve the management of the publishing department, to which the members of the firm were unable to give much personal attention. . . . I had often discussed the matter with my mother, who had a keen and businesslike intelligence; I was eager to assume a responsible position in the business, and on the deposition of Mr. Reid my mother persuaded my father, who in turn persuaded his partners, to put me in charge of the publishing department. I was to have the modest sum of £1,500 at my absolute disposal. I stipulated that I was not to be questioned or interfered with in any way as to its use; with this sum I was to make what publishing ventures I pleased. Behold me then, a youth not yet twenty, searching the horizon for authors whose literary bantlings I might introduce to an admiring and, as I fondly hoped, purchasing world.'

'My first venture was the publication of R. H. Horne's—"Orion" Horne's—"New Spirit of the Age"—a series of essays on well-known living writers. I doubt whether any publisher has ever been so much interested in a book as I was in these two volumes. It was, from the publisher's point of view, my first-born. I have since had publishing and commercial ventures involving comparatively very large sums, but not one has ever given me such anxious care as these volumes. I read every line of the book, first in manuscript and then in proof; I poured upon the unfortunate author all sorts of youthful criticisms and suggestions. I had sleepless nights over the book.' There were difficulties with the author, which Mr. Smith amusingly describes. Thackeray reviewed the book favourably, but he hurt Horne's feelings and Horne was furious. It is curious to recall that this eccentric man published the first three editions of 'Orion' at a farthing a copy. In the fourth edition the price was a shilling a copy, and in the fifth half-a-crown.

Mr. Smith's next venture brought him into relations with Leigh Hunt, and the account of the transaction must be told in his own words: 'I went to Peckham to dine with Mr. Thomas Powell, who, as well as being a confidential clerk in the counting-house of two brothers who were wealthy merchants in the City, dabbled in literature. The merchants were supposed to have suggested to Charles Dickens the Cheeryble Brothers in "Nicholas Nickleby." Powell afterwards went to the United States and contributed articles of a very personal character to the New York newspapers about English men of letters. While I waited in Powell's little drawing-room for a few minutes before dinner, I took up a neatly written manuscript which was lying on the table, and was reading it when my host entered the room. "Ah," he said, "that doesn't look worth £40, does it? I advanced £40 to Leigh Hunt on the security of that manuscript, and I shall never see my money again." When I was leaving I asked Powell to let me take the manuscript with me. I finished reading it before I went to sleep that night, and next day I asked Powell if he would let me have the manuscript if I paid him the £40. He readily assented, and having got from him Leigh Hunt's address, I went off to him in Edwardes Square, Kensington, explained the circumstances under which the manuscript had come into my possession, and asked whether, if I paid him an additional £60, I might have the copyright. "You young prince!" cried Leigh Hunt, in a tone of something like rapture, and the transaction was promptly concluded. The work was "Imagination and Fancy." It was succeeded by "Wit and Humour" and other books, all of which were successful, and the introduction was the foundation of a friendship with Leigh Hunt and the members of his family which was very delightful to me.' Of Hunt's eccentricities Mr. Smith gives a most amusing account. We hope he will continue these reminiscences, for few men now living can have more interesting recollections than has the friend and publisher of Thackeray, the founder of the Cornhill Magazine and of the 'Dictionary of National Biography.'

THE FUTURE OF THE NOVEL.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—In the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of August 11 there is an interesting article on the published price of novels, in which occurs this paragraph: 'We should not be at all surprised to find the ordinary six-shilling novel issued at half-a-crown or less.' Literature also says the same.

My purpose in this letter is to bring under your notice an article (which I enclose) on this very subject, written and published by me in January 1896.

At the time of publishing this article I sent copies to all the leading publishers in Great Britain, and most of the literary journals—the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR included—but nothing came of it, and only a bare half-dozen acknowledged the receipt. Well, it appears now that I was only before the time, and that that time has already come.

Will you do me the favour to read the article?

Yours faithfully,
CHARLES WALCH (J. Walch & Sons).

Wellington Bridge, Hobart:
September 18, 1900.

The following are the main portions of the article to which Mr. Walch refers. It appeared originally in Walch's Literary Intelligencer for January 1896, and we reprint it as representing the views of colonial booksellers on a question in which we are all concerned:

[illegible] given to those who stand apart, and are in a position to take a more comprehensive survey than the actors themselves, and to foresee whither matters are tending. We claim to be in such a position, and to us it is clear that the innovation of the 'Colonial Library' cannot be [illegible] but that the principle contained in that series is of universal application, and that the volumes will in the near future have unrestricted sale everywhere. We stated in a previous article, 'The Story of the Colonial Library,' that the publication of novels is increasing by 'leaps and bounds.' Here are the facts to support that statement, taken [illegible]

New Novels and Tales Published in 1884	...	408
	1894	1,015

[illegible] novels had more than trebled! What is to be done with this mass of literature? The question for the publisher [illegible] is not the question for the purchaser. These books are [illegible] there seems to be no limit to this yearly increase. It is this that has dealt the death-blow to the three-volume novel and made the single-volume novel the order of the day.

There is, however, no more finality in the publishing than there is in the political world: no 'rest and be thankful' for publishers; and therefore, good as is the [illegible] a still further change impending, and that in the near future. What is the form that this change will take?

THE COLONIAL LIBRARY AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

When Messrs. Macmillan & Co. started their Colonial Library by issuing high-class novels in paper covers at popular prices for 'India and the Colonies,' their object, as stated in their circular to the colonial trade, was to [illegible] moderate price which will not be sold in England at all,' and further they stated that they did this 'without attempting to revolutionise the methods of book publishing in England.' Now, the very thing that Messrs. Macmillan & Co. did not intend to do is the very thing that through their action they will be instrumental in bringing about; for the Colonial Library of new novels, supplied to the colonial reader for half-a-crown, has proved beyond question that the same can be done—yes, and will be done—for the English reader. And so, by the irony of fate, too strong for human limits and purposes, the publishing firm that deprecated 'attempting to revolutionise' is responsible for the 'revolution' that is impending! But it will be no sudden and comp'eted 'revolution.' Some one publisher will show the way, as was done in the instance of the Colonial Library, and then others, seeing the success of the venture, will follow.

HOW THEY DO IT IN FRANCE.

And surely there is precedent for this new departure. Look abroad and what do we find on the Continent of Europe? Take France for instance. It has long been an established custom of French publishers to issue works of fiction on their first publication in paper covers, with the result that edition after edition rapidly pass into the hands of purchasers, thus securing to the publisher a quick return for his outlay, and benefiting alike him and the author. Here from our shelf of French novels we take down at random three books, and what do we find? One has on its title page 'Huitième édition'; another, 'Vingt-troisième édition'; and yet another, 'Cinquante-septième édition.' We do not know the number of copies contained in a 'French' edition, or, for that matter, in an 'English' edition; but, at any rate, it shows that novels in this cheap form do attain a larger circulation.

CHANGED CONDITIONS AND REVISED METHODS.

We are glad to see that at last, after unconscionable delay, publishers have thrown off the incubus of the Circulating Library as regards novels, for we are certain that for some time past the first publication of a novel in its interest alone has been most detrimental to that of both author and publisher. Doubtless in the old 'stay-at-home' days Circulating Libraries had their raison d'être, and publishers were right in catering for them; but in these days of running to and fro, o'er land and sea, it is the purchaser, not the library reader, that the publisher should study, and when conditions alter the wise man will revise his methods to meet those conditions. There are thousands of travellers who would take with them not one but a dozen or so of the newest novels, just published, if such could be had of the least possible bulk consistent with good clear type, and at a price, say, of half-a-crown. We have [illegible] true that it is the supply that creates the demand, and that numbers of persons never distinctly realise what their wants are until the [illegible] them.

WHAT SHOULD PUBLISHERS DO?

How short is the life of the ordinary novel in these days when twenty-five of them are ushered into the world every week? Happy author he whose work is spoken about for a week; and he is to be reckoned among the number of the 'immortals' who fills the public mind for a month. Under these new conditions, what is the wise and prudent publisher to do? Stubbornly adhere to the old ways just because they are old? Should he not rather with open mind ad[illegible] to the change, and, taking advantage of the [illegible] of modern life, 'go on to fortune'? [illegible] commercial men, and it would be [illegible] and speak of them as if they were [illegible] their transactions by the [illegible] They enter on their publishing business for the [illegible] and legitimate purpose of publishing and selling books in order that they may get an adequate return for their enterprise and outlay. Mind, in saying this, we do not [illegible] for ever, is not in itself, and apart from all considera[illegible]

Take a very special instance. There is the 'Dictionary of National Biography' now being issued by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. Does anyone believe that the publishers will ever get an adequate return for their outlay on that national work? And yet, knowing this, it is a certainty that the honour of publishing such a work will be of itself a sufficient motive to ensure its completion. But the exception only proves the rule, and that rule is that books are published because there is 'money in them.' Now it is on this ground that we urge publishers to issue their novels at once in a cheap form with paper covers; of course, at the same time, bringing out a better edition in cloth for those who so prefer it. They will find, in these days when a hundred new novels see the light every month, that a large immediate sale, with its quick returns, will pay far better than the slow, tedious process of first a dear edition, then a somewhat cheaper one, and afterwards, when all public interest has died out of the book and it has been relegated to the limbo of forgotten things, a cheap popular edition. In form this cheap issue must correspond with the present Colonial Library, but not, certainly not, be like unto the 'Yellow Back.'

IN MEMORIAM.

Professor Max Müller,

We record with deep regret the death of Professor Max Müller, which took place on Sunday at his residence, Norham Gardens, Oxford, from disease of the liver.

Frederic Max Müller, son of Wilhelm Müller, a poet well known in his day, was born at Dessau on December 6, 1823, and received his early education in the school of that town and subsequently at Leipzig and Berlin, where he graduated in 1843. As a boy his imagination was fascinated by stories of India, and very early he became a proficient in Oriental languages, mastering Arabic, Persian, and Sanskrit; while in Philosophy and Comparative Philology he also attained early eminence. His first work—a translation of the 'Hitopadesa,' a collection of Sanskrit fables—appeared when he was only twenty-one years of age. At Paris he continued his studies under Eugène Burnouf, and collected materials for an edition of the 'Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans.' He came to England in 1846, and on the advice of Baron Bunsen he remained here, the East India Company helping him in some of his early publications. In 1848 he settled at Oxford, where the first volume of the 'Rig-Veda' was published.

At Oxford he held successively the posts of Taylorian Professor of Modern Languages and Curator of the Bodleian, until, in 1868, after being an unsuccessful candidate for the chair of Sanskrit, there was specially created for him the chair of Comparative Philology at Corpus, which he soon made one of the most important in the university. He published forty volumes of 'The Sacred Books of the East,' and a whole library of other—that is to say, original—works which we need not enumerate. In 1873, at the request of Dean Stanley, he delivered a lecture in the nave of Westminster Abbey on the 'Religions of the World,' which at the time caused great excitement, and in 1878 he delivered in the Chapter House of Westminster a course of lectures on 'The Origin and Growth of Religion as illustrated by the Religions of India.' He also delivered the Rede and other lectures at Cambridge, and was Gifford Lecturer on Natural Religion in Glasgow University. Under the suggestive title of 'Chips from a German Workshop,' he published a series of essays in four volumes. Of honours he had a liberal share. He was one of the eight foreign members of the Institute of France and knight of the Ordre pour le Mérite, a member of the Reale Accademia dei Linceii of Rome, and a D.C.L. of Cambridge, Edinburgh, and Bologna. In 1889 he was elected first President of the Aryan section at the International Congress of Orientalists held at Stockholm and Christiania, and received the first class of the Northern Star from the King of Sweden. During recent years the Professor devoted himself to the teaching of several Buddhist priests who had been sent to him from Japan to learn Sanskrit, and this led to the discovery that the oldest Sanskrit manuscripts existed in Japan.

Of the great object of his life he gave some interesting particulars in 1875, when resigning the Taylorian Chair to a deputy: 'I shall,' he wrote, 'at the end of this academic year have served the university for exactly twenty-five years. I have just finished the work of my life, the editio princeps of the text and commentary of the oldest of the sacred books of the Brahmans, the oldest book of the Aryan world. This first brought me, in 1846, to England, where alone I could have found all the manuscripts necessary for that undertaking, and where I afterwards obtained, through the liberality of the Indian Government, the pecuniary means required for publishing the largest Sanskrit text ever published in Europe. It was in order to be able to stay in England to superintend the printing of this work that I accepted the duties of a professor in your university; and if I tell you that, in addition to my professional duties, I have had to print at your university press what would amount to a volume of about 600 pages, octavo, of pure Sanskrit, in every one of the last twenty-five years, you will, perhaps, be less surprised that I begin to long for some rest. Though the most difficult part of my work is now finished, there still remains much to be done. I have published the first volume only of my translation of the "Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans," and there are seven more to follow. There is some other work, too, connected with this, the most ancient and most important monument of Sanskrit literature, which, if life and health are spared, I should like to finish. This I could not hope to achieve if I attempted to discharge at the same time, as I have hitherto done, the duties incumbent on a Professor of Comparative Philology in this university, duties which seem to me to consist, not only in giving a certain number of lectures, but in keeping well abreast of the rapid advance of this young science. I had, therefore, to choose between Sanskrit and Comparative Philology, and great as will be the sacrifice to myself, I believe I shall best fulfil the wishes of my friends and best serve the interests of science if, during the remaining years of my life, I again devote my undivided attention to the ancient language and literature of India.' Though he lived so long in England, he was to the end a German in modes of thought and in intellectual sympathy. Professor Max Müller wrote an autobiographical work under the title of 'Auld Lang Syne,' on which he was engaged at the time of his death.

DEARER BOOKS AND PAPER IN FRANCE.

Publishers and booksellers in Paris and elsewhere in France are raising the prices of books, and it is said that the increase is likely to continue. The movement began with the cheapest books; those published at 25 c. having doubled in price, and 1 fr. volumes are now marked 1 fr. 15 c. and 1 fr. 25 c.

A bookseller interviewed by a representative of Le Temps explained that the increase commenced with the low-priced volumes because of the rise in price of ordinary paper, which has gone up from 45 to 50 per cent. in the last three months. As publishers have made very little profit on these cheap productions, they have been forced to raise the selling prices. 'Even when these are doubled expenses are barely met. As papers of better quality have not been so much raised in price, and as the profit on a 3 fr. volume is large enough to give a margin of profit in spite of dearer paper, we shall not raise the price of such volumes should the present crisis not increase. However, we do not know what may happen. Papermakers are in a better position than we to point out the causes of the crisis, and to say when it may end. . . .'

M. Mannoury, President of the Syndicate Chamber of Wholesale Paper Dealers, stated that the paper crisis had several causes: the high price of coal, of rags, of chemicals, and generally of the primary matters used in making paper. 'This increase in prices would have had less influence in making paper dearer if there had not been at the same time an increase in the demand. In short, while we were paying dearer for the various products used in the manufacture orders were more numerous owing to the increase in the output of newspapers, of books, and of the prospectuses, catalogues, and other publications scattered broadcast by exhibitors and manufacturers in the early days of the Exhibition. These circumstances resulted in a rise of 40 per cent. in inferior papers. Then, too, in England paper has been wanted; the Transvaal war has created such a demand for ordinary papers on which are printed wrappers and pamphlets that English traders had to take the train to Paris to ensure necessary supplies.

'The drought prevailing in many places has in no small degree contributed to these high prices. Coal is scarce and very dear. Two kilos. (4 lbs.) of coal at least are required for one kilo. of paper, and the price of coal has so risen that the cost of producing one kilo. of paper, which was 1 fr. six months ago, is now 2 fr.

'In the manufacture of the machine-made paste (pâte mécanique) for inferior paper, especially in Germany, the want of coal is supplied by hydraulic power. The loss would therefore have been less if water had been forthcoming for this mode of production; but the drought necessitated the stopping of many factories, and as we in France depend on Norway and Sweden, on Germany and Northern Europe, for the substitutes of productions used in paper-making, we have been really very much embarrassed. Some large firms have been quite out of paper on several occasions. The price of machine-made paste has doubled: from 10 fr. in 1899 the price has risen to 20 fr. this year. But from 80 to 85 per cent. of paste is used in the manufacture of ordinary paper.

SOLD OUT

'At present we are very anxious. How can we tell when the coal crisis will end? The miners' syndicate know how to control the output of the mines, and if the winter be severe many factories are likely to be without coal. So I predict a rise rather than a fall in the price of paper, and consequently of books. I fear that a fall is not to be expected for a year, perhaps two. It may be remembered that the Paris publishers some months ago raised the net prices of books from 2 fr. 75 c, to 3 fr. They now talk of a further advance to 3 fr. 25 c.'

INDEX-MAKING.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—In reply to your correspondent, Mr. T. Batterbury, may I, as an indexer of some years' experience, be allowed to point out that his letter, appearing in your last issue, would have been better headed 'Injudicious Biography'? Writing, as he does, under the title 'Index-Making,' he appears to direct his blame against the indexer who faithfully recorded the gist of an offending passage, rather than against the author who inserted the paragraph in the body of the work.

Are we then to understand that Mr. Batterbury would constitute the indexer a critic of all works submitted for indexing, to pick and choose among incidents and characteristics, and to suppress on his or her own responsibility any passages which may be deemed objectionable? I do not know the particular biography to which your correspondent refers, but the principle raised is an important one. Of necessity the predilections and prejudices of the indexer must often run counter to those of the author; an intelligent indexer has his own views on general questions, and on the conduct of public men judged worthy of biography. But surely it is assumed that in undertaking to index any particular work he makes it his object, for the purposes of the index, to subordinate his view to that of the author, and as far as possible to see eye to eye with him.

I am, Sir,
14 Victoria Gardens, W.: Yours truly,
Oct. 29, 1900. E. M. SAMSON.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'Lord Jim,' by Joseph Conrad. There is practically only one character in this tale, that which supplies a title for the volume—Lord Jim. To this character Mr. Conrad has plainly devoted his earnest attention, bringing out all its phases with a persistency of detail that goes perilously near to making the relation tedious. Another feature of the story which scarcely adds to its intrinsic interest is that it is supposed, for the most part, to be told by a third party, and thus we are treated to a profusion of inverted commas that only confuse and irritate. This method of narration, we think, is distinctly a mistake. But all said and done, exclusive character study and inverted commas notwithstanding, it yet remains that Lord Jim is an exceedingly clever and interesting story. The personality of the hero is so attractive in its perfect honesty, romantic devotion to unselfishness, and extreme sensitiveness to imputation of cowardice, that we find ourselves thoroughly engrossed in the working of the man's mind and sympathise most heartily with him in all his troubles. These arise from the fact that while acting as chief mate of the Patma, a steamer sailing from an Eastern port with some eight hundred pilgrims on board, he is placed in such a position as to be fairly accused of deserting the ship and its human freight in time of danger; and, being convicted, his certificate is taken from him. Humiliated beyond measure—for he is not really guilty—he strives to procure forgetfulness by employment among people where he is not known. Much of the supposed narrator's love and interest for Jim is certainly made natural in the story, and as a character study it will hold the reader's attention. A little more variety, however, would have afforded a pleasant relief.

From Mr. John Clegg, The Aldine Press, Rochdale.—'The History of the Parish of Preston in Amounderness in the County of Lancaster,' by Henry Fishwick, F.S.A. Lancashire is rich in historical associations, but few of its towns possess more old-time interest than Preston. Mr. Fishwick's volume is largely concerned with the old families of the town, and the ancient halls they inhabited, and in this respect may be said to be particularly interesting. The ecclesiastical history of the place is also fully considered, and among the subjects for the various chapters are the Hospital of the Lepers, Grey Friars Monastery, and the Grammar School. Leprosy in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries was pretty prolific in the North of Lancashire, and in the reign of Henry II. at least three hospitals for the treatment of sufferers in this locality had been founded, of which St. Mary Magdalen, Preston, was one. Mr. Fishwick has very thoroughly treated his subject, not only in regard to its general history, but also in the matter of parliamentary representation, public charities, and so forth. His work will be read with great interest by all who are associated with Preston, and a word of commendation should be paid to the general production of the volume, which speaks highly for the Aldine Press. There are several illustrations.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'England, Egypt, and the Sudan,' by H. D. Traill, D.C.L. The author takes up his 'argument' with the establishment of the Khedivate, and in a series of extremely interesting, well-informed chapters describes most of the notable events that have occurred within recent years in connection with our attitude towards Egypt and the Sudan. Thus he devotes special attention to the reign of Ismail Pasha, Arabi Pasha and the rebellion of 1882, Tel-el-Kebir and the fall of Arabi, the story of Khartum, the death and avenging of Gordon, l'Affaire Marchand, &c. In his concluding chapter, in which he sums up the question, Mr. Traill says: 'Is there any power excepting France—and even here we must distinguish between the France of politics and the France of commerce and finance—which is dissatisfied with the position of England in Egypt? Is there one State—and here we do not except France—in which it is not recognised that the financial and political stability which we have substituted in Egypt for the older conditions of internal disquietude and international intrigue is a benefit to the entire European community? There is none. It is a benefit which is acknowledged by the citizens of every country in Europe, and not more emphatically anywhere than by that influential body of French financiers who are so largely interested in the debt of Egypt, and who have more than once interposed to restrain their own Government when tension was threatening the relations between Downing Street and the Quai d'Orsay. It is the French party politician, and he alone, who clamours for the withdrawal of Great Britain, and periodically denounces this country for its alleged "violation of its pledges."' The volume shows Mr. Traill to have had a masterly grasp of his subject, and he seems on the whole to have handled points of dispute with judgment. Those who are concerned in the Egyptian question may well be advised to read this interesting work, which is further supplied with some excellent maps.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Paisley.—A Modern Suburb,' by R. A. Sinclair. This s a pleasantly written story, which without possessing any exceptional ability, either of construction or character portrayal, yet contrives to sustain the reader's interest to the close. The scene is laid in Scotland, but the dialect, even the peculiar form of idiomatic expression, is conspicuous by its absence, though here and there a representative turn of thought may be apparent. No doubt many English readers will not regret the absence of the first named quality.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'The Stickit Minister's Wooing, and other Galloway Stories,' by S. R. Crockett. It is scarcely necessary at the present day to speak of the general character of Mr. Crockett's work. These stories exhibit all that intimate knowledge of Scotch life, its nobility, pathos, and humour, which we associate with the writer. Their greatest fault is that they are too short, for the reader has scarcely made the acquaintance of the characters when the relationship is broken off. The volume is admirably adapted for the odd moments stolen from work of a more serious nature, and the observer of national distinctions should revel in its pages.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'St. Peter's Umbrella: a Novel,' by Kálmán Mirkszath. Translated from the Hungarian by B. W. Worswick, with Introduction by R. Nisbet Bain. Next to Jókai, Mirkszath is the most popular of the Magyar fictionists, and in 'St. Peter's Umbrella' he is seen almost at his best. The scene of the story is laid among a number of quaint out-of-date Slovak villages, and the interest revolves in a delightfully humorous fashion round the influences of a dilapidated red umbrella and a new brass caldron. There is not very promising material here, the reader will think, to construct an interesting story out of, but a perusal of Mr. Mirkszath's pages will show what an adroit invention can do. The umbrella through a certain mystic reputation becomes elevated into the tutelary deity of some half a dozen parishes; and the caldron is wrongly supposed to contain innumerable treasures, and is the cause of various disputes and several family downfalls. The story is decidedly clever, and will well repay perusal.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Dissemblers,' by Thomas Cobb. This is a very bright, amusing story, written in a genuine spirit of light comedy. A young and attractive girl, Penelope Hammond, is, through the force of somewhat ludicrous circumstances, placed in a highly compromising position with an equally presentable man, Leslie Monroe; and the situation is further aggravated by the publicity given to the matter by an enterprising journalist, who sees the guilty couple, as he thinks, dining together at an hotel in Dover. There is only one way out of the difficulty, according to the guardian of the young lady, and that is for the parties in the misapprehension to get married. So he coolly proposes to Leslie that he shall marry his niece, and thus put a stop to the scandal. Leslie, who is really half in love with the girl already, agrees, with the proviso of a fairly long engagement, and brings Penelope (equally willing) over to his view by pointing out that the engagement need only be a nominal one, and can readily be relinquished at some future period, when the scandal has subsided. The suppression of true feeling on each side now causes further trouble, much to the interest of the reader. The story is extremely entertaining, and a certain prodigality of sentiment, we are sure, will not be distasteful to the majority of fiction-lovers.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Marshfield the Observer, and the Death Dance: Studies of Character and Action,' by Egerton Castle. Candidly we must confess to liking Mr. Castle very much better in his character studies pure and simple than in the actions by which he would show how these special attributes in his puppets worked out. There is frequently an air of unreality about them which suggests that even the character study is not founded so much on actual fact as upon the inventive ingenuity of the author's imagination—the evolution, so to speak, of a fanciful conception. But the stories are undoubtedly interesting, if somewhat artificial, while the description of Meldrum Marshfield, the watchful being to whom their existence is attributable, is sketched with great cleverness. Mr. Castle tells us that he could fill several volumes with the observer's stories, 'were it not that the majority of these were undeniably more suited to the uncompromising realism of a Guy de Maupassant than to the reticence of an English pen.' In candour of treatment these stories are certainly not wanting, and if the untold narratives are more 'realistic'—a term that we object to, because it seems always in the hands of certain writers to apply to the one aspect of life—then they must be outspoken indeed. But Mr. Castle's sketches, as we have hinted, are not particularly convincing, and the reader even of the unsophisticated kind is not likely to take them as descriptions of actual life so much as ebullitions of the author's imaginative faculty. From whatever point regarded, however, they are distinctly readable.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Relief of Mafeking: how it was accomplished by Mahon's Flying Column; with an Account of some earlier Episodes in the Boer War of 1899-1900,' by Filson Young. There is a certain freshness of style in this volume which, considering the number of records we have had of prominent incidents in the war, is welcome. Mr. Young divides his volume into five parts, in which he respectively treats of England in time of war, his experiences in the wake of the army, Lord Roberts's advance to Bloemfontein, an expedition with Lord Methuen, and the work of the Flying Column in the relief of Mafeking. The last portion of the volume is naturally exceedingly interesting. Here Mr. Young tells of the departure from Kimberley, the advance from Taungs to Vryburg, the joining of Plumer's forces, the fighting on the Molopo, and the eventual relief of the beleaguered town. The volume is written simply and unaffectedly, and gains in interest from this fact. The illustrations include portraits of Lord Roberts, Mr. G. Lenthal Chettle, F.R.C.S., Lord Methuen, and General Mahon.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Worldlings,' by Leonard Merrick. The plot of this interesting novel rests on a matter of false personification. Maurice Blake, employed on the uncongenial work of overseeing Kaffirs at the Diamond Fields [illegible], [illegible] Philip Jardine, through fever. Almost at the moment of Jardine's death there arrives a letter from his father, a rich baronet in England, desiring him to return [illegible] like Jardine in appearance, is then persuaded by the woman with whom the last named has been living to present himself in his stead, and the two embark for this country, the compact being that whatever Blake gets he shall hand over a quarter of to his fellow partner and accomplice. Arrived in England, the ruse is entirely successful, and the old baronet fully believes Blake to be his long-separated son, whom he has not seen for upwards of twenty-three years. But entanglements speedily gather about the impostor's path. He falls in love with a beautiful titled girl, and after some struggle with his conscience marries her, though at the time she is anything but passionately attached to him. Afterwards the real truth comes out through the intervention of Blake's companion in crime, but how the story ends we shall not say. Many of the characters are depicted with real power, and there is a broad humanity pervading the narrative that is certain to enlist the reader's sympathy. It is one of the best novels Mr. Merrick has yet written.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Richelieu and the Growth of the French Power,' by James Breck Perkins, LL.D. The author of this volume is happier in his choice of subject than many of the other writers in the 'Heroes of the Nations,' seeing that the materials for a study of Richelieu's career are numerous and easily accessible. In the preparation of his work Mr. Perkins has chiefly relied upon the Cardinal's correspondence, his mémoires, and the MSS. which are to be found in the Affaires Etrangères at Paris and in the other public offices. He has also consulted in the formation of his judgment the numerous contemporary memoirs by Bassompierre, Pontis, Fontrailles, Turenne, Gaston, Molé, and so forth, while the voluminous literature in reference to Richelieu has been well sifted for reliable information and impressions. The result is a volume of much interest. The author opens his work with a brief description of France as the Cardinal found it. He then recapitulates the chief events of his early career, describes the years during which he was in disgrace (1617-1624), and so leads up to the overthrow of the Huguenot party. Succeeding chapters are devoted to a consideration of Richelieu and his enemies, his administration, the Thirty Years' War, and the close of his career; while further topics of discussion are his internal administration, his relations with the Church, and the result of his government. As touching the last named, Mr. Perkins thinks it is doubtful whether the French people were any happier at the end of Richelieu's administration than at the beginning; but beyond question France was a more powerful State. The volume is illustrated with several portraits, plans, and views of old buildings.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'A Furnace of Earth,' by Hallie Erminie Rives. This is a story that will strike dispassionate readers as a great trouble about nothing—one of those exaggerated descriptions of morbid self-consciousness that are fashionable just now, but which in reality represent a distinct form of mental disease. It is therefore the more to be regretted that the authoress has invested her subject with such a wealth of refined, intellectual charm, while the sensuous warmth she has imparted to her narrative is a still further attraction. The heroine becomes engaged to the hero under very natural conditions. She afterwards writes to tell him that their marriage is no longer possible. No reason is given for this step—she does not even say she no longer loves him; but there is a vague suggestion of a something having come between them which he is implored to accept. 'I can't answer your question,' she replies when he reasons with her; 'it isn't whether I love you, it's how. Doesn't that tell you anything? I mustn't be mistaken in the way! You must not try to see me; it would only make me more wretched than I am now, and that is a great deal more than I could ever tell you.' The cause of their parting is, in fact, an excessive amount of sensitiveness on the girl's side. Afterwards the man meets with an accident, being pretty well knocked out of any resemblance to his ordinary self. Then the girl's love returns to him, and in the wards of the hospital where she has sought occupation she bemoans her hard fate, and implores that he may live. In other words, having caused all the mischief through her idiotic conduct she now poses as truly repentant—though it is to be feared her repentance would only last for a short time. The healthy minded can have little sympathy with such a character—the distortion of naturally refined attributes. That such women exist is undoubted—their prevalence at the present day is one of the evils that specialists on nervous disorders have to combat—but their glorification is scarcely a matter for congratulation. We admit the ability of 'A Furnace of Earth,' but regret that the talents of the authoress should be turned to such an unworthy purpose.

From Mr. Elliot Stock.—'The Minor Writings of Charles Dickens: a Bibliography and Sketch,' by Frederic G. Kitton. Mr. Kitton by this time—by constant devotion to his subject, both as illustrator and writer—has become something of a Dickens authority, but we are not sure that we can exactly compliment him on his present work. Much of it is necessarily old material, though credit is to be given for the painstaking exertion with which he has gathered it together. Anything, however, about so genial and distinguished a man as Dickens is interesting, and we find ourselves pleasantly occupied in traversing beaten tracks. Now and again we light on an ill-remembered passage that provokes amusement. Such, for instance, is Mrs. Oliphant's shrewd allusion to Dickens's position as editor of the Daily News. 'No doubt,' she observes, 'his relations with his staff would be delightfully genial, and his room in the office was a pleasant haunt, much frequented by his friends; but the publisher admitted to one of Dickens's latest biographers that "he was not sure that the work did not sometimes begin after the editor had left!"' We looked with interest to see if Mr. Kitton could give us any further information in in regard to 'The Uncommercial Traveller,' but found ourselves disappointed. Some of the papers in this series were exceedingly good, but others bore manifest signs of being written at uncongenial moments. On the the whole, Mr. Kitton has produced an interesting little volume, which admirers of Dickens will find agreeable reading.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The World's Great Snare,' by E. Phillips Oppenheim. The gold-digger community has always been a favourite subject for treatment among writers of sensational fiction, and in his present novel Mr. Oppenheim has brought out the full effect of the rough picturesque surroundings. It is only, however, in the first of the three parts of which the story is composed that the scene is laid in the California gold fields; afterwards it is shifted to this country. The hero of the narrative is one Bryan, a stalwart Englishman, about whose birth there is some mystery, which he has gone out to San Francisco in an endeavour to clear up. In the town of gambling hells and Chinamen he meets with a highly attractive girl, whose antecedents are scarcely what they might be, though the fault is hardly her own; and when he departs for the gold-fields, she at great risk follows him. Several exciting scenes follow, principally because Myra recognises in Jim Hamilton, one of the desperadoes of the camp, the man who previously betrayed her under a form of marriage; and ultimately Bryan and Myra have to take a sudden and hazardous departure from the scene of gold exploitation, and they return to San Francisco. Here Bryan is very ill, and Myra, in order to obtain the actual necessaries of life for him, appeals for help to an old admirer, into whose clutches after so long resisting she at length falls. After this our attention is transferred to more civilised though scarcely so interesting society. Bryan has returned to England, where, thanks to a lucky 'find' at the gold-fields, he is able to cut a great dash. He is anxious to marry Lady Helen Wessemer, a proud society beauty, and eventually she consents; but Myra appears again in the rôle of a fascinating light opera singer and—complications ensue. The story, more especially in the scenes of Californian life, is lively and vigorous, but the plot is scarcely so clear and well defined as it might be, and in this way it loses something of its interest.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Flick of Fortune,' by Thomas Parkes. There is, perhaps, not very much substance in this story, and it is almost impossible to take keen interest in the doings of so weak and undecided a hero as Jack Martin, who is paying loverlike attentions to two pretty girls at the same time; but it has its good points notwithstanding. The style is natural and unaffected, and the story will appeal with considerable force to those who appreciate a narrative of simple life rather than a novel of intellectual power or turbulent passion.

New Editions.—Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. have issued a fifth edition of Captain William Siborne's admirable work on 'The Waterloo Campaign, 1815.' The book was first published in 1844, and is generally regarded as a most valuable and comprehensive history of the war. In the present edition the work is to a certain extent curtailed by the omission of one half the Appendix and nearly all the notes, but this in no way affects the practical value of the treatise. A capital portrait of the Duke of Wellington is given as a frontispiece, and there are also other illustrations.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

TWO NEW WORKS

BY

CAPTAIN A. T. MAHAN, U.S.N.

NOW READY

CAPTAIN MAHAN'S

Story of the War in South Africa

In 1 vol. With Map. Crown 8vo. cloth elegant, 10s. 6d. net.

 This Work on the War in South Africa by the great American historian will unquestionably prove of the deepest interest to English Readers.

'The reader who has hitherto depended upon popular accounts of the war will now appreciate and welcome guidance over the extensive field by an historian who knows the business of war so well as to be able to make the whole thing clear in comparatively little space. . . . The praise of the British for steady, forward gallantry will be most gratifying to British readers. Captain Mahan is greatly impressed with the effect the war has had on the development of the idea of Imperial Federation. . . . The mishaps of Reddersburg and Koornspruit do not detract from Captain Mahan's admiration of the rest of the campaign.'—DAILY NEWS.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.
